THE TRINITY IVY 1972

The Ninety-Ninth Year of Publication

Trinity should remain a community of scholars affirming the validity of the truth-finding process. We must continue to offer the individual the opportunity to review the human values according to which he or she will serve society. We defend intellectual integrity because we know of no better way to understand our problem and then to act in behalf of humanity. Our priorities must reflect these convictions.

Theodore D. Lockwood
September, 1971

The primary concern of Trinity College ought to be the creation of an exciting community of scholars. Such a community should pride itself on both individual excellence and on its abilities for sharing intellectual experiences. In order to realize this goal we must elicit concerned enthusiasm among students and faculty on the grounds that Trinity College is an exciting and worthwhile institution.

The Task Force on Academic Programs

“A majority of students entering the college and university do so with a sense of liberation, eager to experiment with and to be responsible for personal moral judgements which, prior to the time of entering, they had shared with parents and school, or which, in some cases, they had not exercised independently at all.”

Thomas A. Smith

“ . . . equality of men and women at the College . . . will be realized only when the College ceases to reflect the stereotypes of women presented by contemporary American society. Only then will Trinity be a truly coeducational institution.”

“ . . . Life at Trinity College is the interplay of many life forms which are at different regions along the evolutionary continuum. If we befriend all of these lives we can complete evolution. For evolution is not a straight line terminating in humanity. It is a circle (or a sphere, perhaps) which we have the opportunity to complete. We can do this by re-acquainting ourselves with the awareness of things (perhaps beginning with the awareness of nothing) and creatures and by embracing and enjoying the continuity of all existence and the wholeness of all awareness.”

Something within me would not allow me to think that Mitch was dead, hell, Mitch Pappas doesn't die, he may leave or go away, but certainly not die. He was life itself. He made people around him want to live, he helped them put life in perspective.

Miss him, you bet your S.A. I do.

So in our celebrating this musical instrument in the west end, there are people. We see it now as a lot of silver, aspiring lines and a tremendous sound, but behind it lies human beings . . . The arts, music, organ building are human beings reaching out to create that which is value in itself so that when it's done, when the organ is built, when the music is played, when the songs are sung, somehow the artist himself can stand back and admire it because it has become a thing for itself.

The Reverend Alan C. Tull,
January 23, 1972

Most of the women students . . . agree that while there are large numbers of women at Trinity, few of them feel that they are fully of Trinity. Many women students feel that they have been relegated to the periphery of what remains a thoroughly masculine institution . . . One of the wisest steps the College has taken within recent memory was the decision to go coeducational . . . But we could quickly fritter away our advantage if large numbers of our women students are dissatisfied as women, or if they become so . . . In particular, a number of women students complain that their male fellow students, as well as some faculty and administrators, do not take their intellectual abilities and educational ambitions seriously enough. Many women feel that many males at the College view them in "sexist" stereotypes—as primarily child-rearers and homemakers, for example, rather than as intellectually able individuals whose business or professional goals are substantially the same as those of men. Insofar as women here are perceived in those terms, they have every right to be resentful. Most of the female students with whom I am acquainted are career-oriented, and rightly so. Given the discouraging obstacles which women still face in many career fields (and some graduate schools), I think the College has a responsibility to bolster their ambitions when they flag, and to smooth as much as possible some of the worst bumps along the way. At the same time, we can certainly try to encourage male students to rethink any "sexist" assumptions they might have. In fact, if we are moving toward a more androgynous society, as Caroline Bird and others maintain, don't we have an obligation as educators to see that some of these questions are raised?

Ron Spencer,
Dean of Community Life
Christmas Term, 1971

I defined a woman's duty,
To look the world in the face with a go-to-hell look in the eyes; to have an idea;
to speak and act in defiance of convention.

—Margaret Sanger, 1938

The right to vote, or equal civil rights, may be good demands, but true emancipation begins neither at the polls nor in courts. It begins in woman's soul. History tells us that every oppressed class gained true liberation from its masters through its own efforts. It is necessary that woman learn that lesson, that she realise that her freedom will reach as far as her power to achieve her freedom reaches.

—Emma Goldman, 1911

“ . . . no structural or mechanical changes alone can get us where we want to go. Above all, we need individual commitment in a scholarly community. What we need is a belief in the value of our enterprise and in each other.”

How can student life be improved at Trinity? How large and what kind of role should the college play in the effort?

To respond, we must know the nature of Trinity students—their special interest, needs, and problems. How do we learn about these? Obviously, we begin by listening carefully to students, and in particular, to what they say about themselves and the College. But this is not usually enough. Listening alone, however good, is limited in that one must wait passively for the student to speak. The College must therefore attempt systematically to consult students about these issues. For the more each group articulates values and needs, the more each will be communicating and becoming a part of the community.

This Committee has considered several areas of student life, and has tried to discuss trends in each. Most notably, we have observed a disturbing kind of individualism—an individualism which often falls off into apathetic or even amoral privatism. The College cannot entirely prevent such individualism and isolation for it is rooted in society itself (technology, sexual and racial attitudes, the death of God, etc.). But the College can take steps in a wide range of areas to lessen this.

Admiral Thomas H. Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, released a memorandum stating that if the United States were freed from "domestic restraints" it might undertake even more extensive operations against North Vietnam. It appears that the President is no longer deterred by the possibility of a confrontation with the Soviet Union or China. It is time for the American people to pose such a threat.

At an All-College meeting last night, 450 students voted to hold a "noncoercive strike" today to protest the escalation of the War in Vietnam. The resolution was passed "in solidarity" with the National Student Association's call for student strikes at colleges today.

The group also passed a resolution calling for a "Mobilization Day Against the War" today, to begin actions to bring "an immediate complete and total end to all U.S. involvement in the war."

A series of eleven workshops and discussions concerning the war have been scheduled for today (See schedule, page 2). The workshops will be led by faculty members and will take place in Mather Hall.

A rally, sponsored by the Hartford Committee of Conscience, will be held at 4:30 at the Federal Building. The rally will be followed by a march to the Army Recruiting Office at the State Armory Building on Capitol Avenue. The march will be led by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, and some participants dressed in black will carry a coffin.

President Lockwood told the TRIPOD in an interview yesterday that he would "endorse the use of nonviolent and constructive means to express" student protest against the War. He added that he supported a letter signed by the presidents of eight Ivy League colleges that condemned the renewed bombing of North Vietnam and "its civilian population."

Lockwood and Cambell, president of Wesleyan University, will send a letter today to Melvin Laird, secretary of defense, be signed by other Connecticut college presidents.

This letter, he added, will not speak for the institutions, but will express the individual views of the presidents.

One of the resolutions passed at last night's meeting stated that "each member of the community devote his or her time and energy on Friday and the weeks following to activities in the Hartford area aimed at bringing...an end to the careers of those politicians who refuse to bring an end to the war."

The resolution stated that today's activities would be "aimed at achieving those ends."

A motion calling for a strike and a suspension of classes failed to reach a majority vote. Richard Hess, '72, argued that the NSA's call for a strike was "meaningless." He said he opposed any hints of coercion because students should be free to do whatever they want today.

Several students claimed a strike would "force the opinions of a few on many." Others suggested that anti-war activities be conducted during students "free time," and not interrupt classes.

One student said a strike would produce community backlash. "They'll figure we just want a three-day weekend," he said.

Other students called upon the group to align itself with national events. "For the last two years, we have been disillusioned. What we need now is nothing more or less than a show of our disapproval," Jill Silverman, '74, stated. "We want to turn the tanks around and have them go home."

She continued, stating it is the national magnitude of the strike, rather than the specific form it takes at Trinity that is politically important.

Theodore Mauch, professor of religion, said the group should use "our imagination and our discipline" in adopting means of protesting the war. He accused the Nixon administration of being "anti-education" because it believes "everything can be solved with a thunderbolt." Educators, he said, "believe in the value of exploration and careful study."

Mauch added that today's strike, because it comes at the end of the term, seemed like searching for quick answers. "Why does it take a crisis like this one to wake us up? We should have been doing this all year," he stated.

Members of the Young Socialists stated that capitalism was the root of the war, and called for a worker-student alliance on behalf of the National Liberation Front, which they said was engaged in a class struggle.

Samuel Hendel, professor of political science, said students should not prevent classes from being held and should not demand that the College take an institutional stand on the war. He said such a stand would violate academic freedom, and would create "an anti-democratic position."

Thomas A. Smith, vice-president, stating that he spoke both "personally and institutionally," said the administration "will not close down the College, and will not tolerate any attempts to stop instructors or students from entering classes."

The administration will not, Smith continued, take action against striking students or professors. He said the administration has no authority over individual faculty members' actions, and that student strikers would be responsible only to their instructors.

Do not be deceived, glib formulas, whether they come from the Left, Right or Center, are not the way out. There is no easy escape. Trinity will not flourish as a "safe" museum; it will not survive if it chooses to become chromium plated and neon lighted. The College has a chance if it offers and students work for the kind of excellence which has meaning in the world into which its students will graduate and try to earn their living.

A Trinity education is designed to give each student that kind of understanding of human experience which will equip him for life in a free society. In order to do this, it must help the student to discover those particular modes of learning which will increase his awareness of himself and of his environment; it must enable him to extend his knowledge within a chosen discipline; and it must encourage him to use the knowledge which he gains to deal responsibly with the problems of a rapidly changing world. The curriculum embodies these aspects of a liberal education.
