PREFATORY NOTE

This Obituary Record is the twenty-second issued, the plan of devoting the July issue of the Bulletin to this use having been adopted in 1918. The data here presented have been collected through the persistent efforts of the Treasurer's Office, which makes every effort to secure and preserve as full a record as possible of the activities of Trinity men as well as anything else having value for the history of the College.

Readers who find it in their power to correct errors or to contribute further information will confer a great favor if they will at once communicate with the Treasurer's Office. Material corrections and additions will be incorporated in the next issue of the Necrology.

Attention is particularly called to those alumni for whose biographies we have only meagre data. It is hoped that relatives and friends may be able to supply additional information, so that an adequate record may be preserved.

Class of 1941

Gordon James Herbert Sterling, Jr., the first Trinity man, it is believed, to lose his life in the World War, was born in Ilion, N. Y., June 30, 1919, a son of Gordon J. H. Sterling, now of West Hartford, and of his wife, Flossie Mabel Crisler.

He was prepared for college at the William H. Hall High School in West Hartford, and entered Trinity College in September 1937 with the Class of 1941. He completed his sophomore year, but pursued only one course his junior year.

In September 1940, he enlisted in the Army Air Corps, and after training at Maxwell Field, Alabama, was graduated April 24, 1941, with the rank of Second Lieutenant, and was sent to Hawaii.

At the attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese on December 7, 1941, he was one of the few to get his plane into the air. He attacked a flight of six Japanese planes, one of which was either damaged or destroyed. While diving on this plane, he was attacked from the rear by another enemy airplane, and was shot down in flames. His body was not recovered.

He was awarded posthumously the Distinguished Flying Cross, the two hundred and twenty-third awarded since it was first authorized during the first World War. March 5, 1942, Major-General Sherman Miles, Commander of the First Corps Area, pinned the medal on his father at the First Corps Area Headquarters in Boston in the presence of his mother and his younger brother, John.

The citation read: "For heroism and achievement while participating in an aerial engagement with Japanese airplanes over the water adjacent to the Island of Oahu on the 7th of December, 1941. Lieutenant Sterling attacked an enemy airplane which was either damaged or destroyed as a result of his fire. While in the act of diving on this airplane, Lieutenant Sterling was attacked from the rear by another enemy airplane and was shot down in flames, which resulted in his death."

General Miles said: "It is my solemn duty and honor to transmit to you the Distinguished Flying Cross which your son so gallantly won in action against the enemy. He was one of the few men to whom the chance was given on that dread Sunday morning in December to engage the Japanese who had attacked us unaware. It was his high privilege to prove American manhood even when treacherously stabbed in the back. He did not lose his life—he gave it to his country. In so doing, he 'exchanged dull age for immortality'."
