TRINITY COLLEGE, Hartford, Conn.

Trinity College, under the name of Washington College, received its charter in 1823. The present name was adopted in 1845. Its chief founder was the Right Rev. Thomas Church Brownell, Bishop of Connecticut. Established by Episcopalians as a contribution to higher education, it is not a Church institution in the sense of being directed by the Church. Its advantages are placed at the service of those of every creed.

Formerly on site of present State Capitol, it was transferred in 1878 to new buildings in the southwestern part of the city. The principal of these, in the English Secular Gothic style, 653 feet long—including Jarvis and Seabury Halls and Northam Towers, is one of the most imposing and admirably fitted educational edifices in the United States. It was intended to form the west side of a great quadrangle. Outside of the lines of this quadrangle on the south, are the Observatory, the Boardman Hall of Natural History, and the Jarvis Laboratories for Chemistry and for Physics. To the north of it are the Gymnasium, houses of the President and Professors, and Chapter Houses of the Fraternities. Below the College Campus to the east and within three minutes' walk, is the spacious Athletic field. In beauty of situation, healthful conditions of life, and equipment for its special work, the College is not surpassed.

The College has distinct courses of four years in Arts, Science, Letters and Science, and in Letters. The Faculty includes thirteen professors, seven instructors, five lecturers, librarian, medical director. Among the Elective studies within the respective courses there is no important subject for which adequate provision is not made.

Properly qualified candidates not desiring to pursue all of the studies of any course are allowed as Special Students to pursue certain subjects, receiving certificates for work satisfactorily accomplished.

The Library contains 48,000 volumes. Generous contributions of the Alumni are making possible a rapid addition to its resources. A Reference Reading Room is open every day and five evenings of the week.

The Jarvis Chemical and Physical Laboratories have every equipment for the most advanced work.

The Hall of Natural History contains the museum and Biological laboratories provided with the most modern appliances.

In the year 1903-1904 a full technical course in Civil Engineering was for the first time made available for all qualified applicants.

There are numerous scholarships providing pecuniary assistance for deserving students. The three Holland Scholarships, yielding each $600 per annum, are awarded to the three best students in the three lower classes respectively. The Russell Graduate Fellowship of $400 is awarded biennially in the interest of higher graduate study. Prizes to the amount of $500 are also awarded to undergraduates for success in the work of the various departments.

Two examinations for admission are held at the college in each year, the first on the three days following the Annual Commencement, and the second in September, immediately before the beginning of the Christmas term.

For Catalogues, Examination papers, or information, apply to the President or Secretary of the Faculty.

An Interesting Fact.

On the 1st of March, 1904, The Connecticut Mutual reached a stage in its history very interesting to its management and its members and one which is unique in the history of American Life Insurance.

On this date, but little more than fifty-eight years from its organization, it had received from its members in premiums the sum of $228,376,268, and had returned to them or their beneficiaries $228,724,073, or $347,805 more than it had received.

The Connecticut Mutual is the first American Life Insurance Company to return to its members one hundred per cent. of its receipts from them. And it holds besides $65,000,000, of assets, with a surplus of over $4,600,000 to protect over 70,000 policy-holders insured for over $166,000,000.

EDITORIALS

WITH this issue the Board of 1904-1905 hands over the TABLET to the men who will conduct it next year.

Resisting the temptation to moralize upon the general "closing up" of the ranks that occurs at the approach of every Commencement, both because we would probably fail to receive the sympathy such a discourse would invite, and because the rather attractive analogy between college and life might seem a trifle morbid, there are still some practical suggestions to be made. In the first place, the TABLET belongs to the college and represents it as much as any team that ever went forth to defeat or victory under its name. The board of editors, as a rule, has full control of the paper, but does not own it. Success or failure returns to the college as a whole.

Again, when any organization changes hands the work it does is hardly likely to be exactly the same. In spite of the traditions we have endeavored to keep inviolate, and the conservatism which far overbalances any desire that there may be for radical improvement, the TABLET for each year is usually distinctly different from the last. Whether or not this change will be an improvement rests to a very large extent upon the college body. In fact, using the first person plural in the sense of its editorial immortality, and echoing the voices of the men who have had the TABLET very much at heart for the past thirty-eight years, we wish to make an appeal for the support our paper deserves. The management will need subscriptions, the editors good and original "material," and lots of it; but we do not mean simply that. The real essential for success is general interest and criticism. During the past year we have had to depend upon the exchange columns of other papers for this incentive. It would amount to much more if it came from the college for which the work is done.

THE BOY FROM NEW ENGLAND

Alice Walton had just allowed her long opera cloak to fall back into the hands of the waiting maid and had started toward the long mirror in the farther dressing room, when she remembered an unopened letter, hidden away in the folds of the cloak and after she had gone back to get it, stood by the big door and read the closely written pages.

The letter was a long one and Alice started to read it hurriedly, then became absorbed in its contents, turning back each sheet to read it a second time and then running over the phrases again in her mind, even after she had put the letter back in her cloak and had started slowly down the stairs to the ball room.

With the quaint, earnest phrases, Alice could recall the writer, a big, dark-looking boy, with steady brown eyes and the odd name of Eben Burr, whom she had met eight months before and whose very existence she only remembered as she received his thick, well written letters at the beginning of each month.

Alice remembered the first time that she had seen Burr. He had been standing alone at a dance and she had noticed him watching her. Then as she had turned toward him suddenly, he had looked away, neither boldly nor with an air of embarrassment, but merely as if he were complying with an unspoken request. Then a few minutes later, he had been presented by Dawson, the popular Dawson, who proved to be his room-mate at college and after that they had danced or sat out for most of the evening.

From the first Burr had impressed the girl with his earnestness. He had a sense of humor that cropped out in the most unexpected places, but usually Alice had felt rather a sense of frivolousness when she had started on the conventional small talk, and sooner or later the two found themselves in the deepest kind of earnest conversation, and the talks would always end in one place. For Burr had one great subject—his home in New England. Other topics he could talk upon well and even brilliantly, but soon some word or thought would bring out the words, "But up home," and then the two would be lost again in the bleak hills, the woods and the white church hamlets of Burr's beloved New England.

Then Burr would tell, for hours, little stories of his home life, of the simple farm folk, of the country legends, of the wilder mountain people or the quaint village characters. Then all this would lead to the problems of the present day. The boy would tell how the old families in the hills were dying out, how their places were being taken by the foreigners; how these latter were gradually forming a race of their own; and of the struggles that were taking place between the remnants of the old inhabitants and new invaders.

The story had been one without end, and as Burr had told it, one of never failing interest. He had anecdotes for every occasion. He could give descriptions of people and of places, delightful in their humor, or in the evenings he would work back to quieter or more pathetic scenes and talk more and more slowly, until the fire in the grate had sputtered to a few last coals and the girl and the man sat in silence.

But that had all been eight months before and Alice had almost forgotten. The letters that Burr wrote from time to time were as earnest and as complete as his conversation, but Alice had had many other things to think of and a hasty note had been the best answer that she had given to any of them.

But this letter was different from the rest. Burr had used many of the odd expressions that he used when he talked and with them came such a world of connotation, that a whole series of pictures had arisen before the girl's mind, and she walked into the brilliant ball room with her thought completely in the past.

Then she remembered Adrian and immediately signalled him to her side. Adrian was a young newspaper man in the metropolis and although very jovial and very presentable, he had never before appealed particularly to Alice. But tonight she remembered that he was from New England, from the same state of which Burr had written and as she wanted to talk New England, she entered at once into conversation with Adrian, asking several questions about his native state with such directness that the reporter saw at once that she wished to talk about the country and turned his conversation in that direction as completely as he could.

As the two strolled off to a divan in the hall, Adrian worked quickly into his story. But it was so different from that told by Burr, that Alice was greatly disappointed and before she realized it, had told everything, of Burr, of his word pictures, and even the names. Then Adrian understood and quickly explained that his New England had been the lowland, the commercial New England, while Burr had come from the hills. But as if to make good for the disappointment caused by his first story, he turned at once to a description of the hill people and soon Alice was back again in the region that Burr had once made so plain to her.

Just as they were leaving the ball room after the last dance and were blocked in the crowd at the doorway, Adrian, to make conversation, picked up a newspaper that had dropped from some overcoat pocket and began to comment facetiously on the headlines. Then as he looked over the pages he stopped suddenly, so suddenly that Alice looked towards him at once and asked the reason. He pointed to a short paragraph at the bottom of a column, and asked nervously :

“Is—is that anything?”

The paragraph was as follows:

“A dispatch to the News from Wittersville, reports a battle between a sheriff’s posse and a band of negroes and Frenchmen at Barringford, ten miles from Wittersville. Several were killed and wounded as follows:

“Killed—John Barrett, deputy sheriff, skull fractured by a falling door. Caesar Freeman, colored, rifle bullet through heart. Eben Burr, deputy sheriff, shot through the brain”—

Adrian looked up but Alice had hurried to the dressing room.

II

Far from the city streets, the lights and the noise of traffic, high in the New England hills, a little band of six men filed out of the darkness into a clearing and dismounted. Then they tied their horses to a rickety fence, shook out their dampened clothes, pressed tight by riding, adjusted their girths or took guns from behind the saddles and gathered in a little group in the sandy road.

The leader, a rather small man, with a black beard and a nasal voice, whispered a few directions and all the men moved forward, up the road, in a line, first the leader, the sheriff, then the five deputies, the last of them, Eben Burr. The clearing grew wider and suddenly there came into view in grey darkness the black shape of a barn at the right of the road. Beside it was a stone wall. Between the wall and the road the grass was newly cut in a rough stubble, while in front of the barn rested an old horse-rake. On the left of the road appeared a house, smaller than the barn.

In the shade of the trees and in the woods around the clearing, the darkness was black and impenetrable, but between the house and the barn there was a semi-grayish light which extended in a narrow strip to the north and the south where the slight opening between the lines of trees showed the course of the road.

Again the men stopped. Then they slowly separated, starting forward in different directions according to their instructions. Burr crept forward through the close-cropped grass in front of the house, to the shadow of a big rock maple, then slowly sank to the ground and waited.

The house belonged to a Frenchman named Jules Lagrand, but the place had a most unpleasant reputation in the whole township, for the Frenchman's little farm usually sheltered a motley gathering of Canadians, Frenchmen and negroes, while almost anyone wanted by the law could usually be found there at some time or other. So when at this time word had come to the officer that Caesar Freeman, a negro who had emptied a charge of buckshot into a mountaineer named Ballard, was being sheltered by Lagrand and his negro wife, the sheriff had lost no time in gathering a posse and in riding to the house to capture the negro.

The officer had assigned four of his men positions around the building, while he himself and the deputy Barrett, were to approach the house and try to gain admission. Ban Freeman, a brother of the man who had done the shooting, had been seen in the village that day and promptly locked up as it was thought that by using his name admission could be gained to the house.

As the youngest member of the party, Burr had been assigned the easiest position, the one between the road and the house, where he would not have to work his way through the crackling underbrush near the house. Here he sat and waited—and waited. In a minute the other men were lost from sight and as quickly from sound. With the silence of their departure other noises began to be heard. The frogs began to “cheep, cheep, cheep” in the swamp behind the barn. A little cool breeze sprang suddenly up and made the leaves on a neighboring bush stir and whimper. Then a June bug came blundering and humming along and stopped suddenly as if he had found that for which he had been looking. A dog began to bark ‘way, ‘way off over the mountain.

Burr was shivering with excitement and he lifted his rifle from his knee, uncocked it, laid it in the hollow of his arm and then cocked it again. Something must have gone wrong. But then of course it hadn’t and Burr settled back to wait again. He thought of the village and his home. Then his thoughts wandered back to the college where he had been graduated a few weeks before. He thought of Dawson and then of Alice Walton. He wondered what she was doing and to whom she was talking at that moment. He wondered if she would be interested in his present adventure. Perhaps she would be, in a kindly sort of way. Her letters always showed that. He must think of a good way to describe it when he next wrote to her. He—

But then a dark form a rod away slowly arose and walked toward the house. Burr started and stood erect. Then he recognized the two figures of Barrett and the sheriff and realized that they had been there all the time. The clouds overhead were breaking and the starlight made the little house stand out in semi-bold relief. A window pane even glimmered with a bit of reflection.

The two men walked slowly up to the little covered porch and then stepped loudly onto the steps, across the boards of the platform and knocked at the door. There was no answer. They knocked again. Then a muffled voice called out gruffly, "What do you want?" "It's me, Ban," the sheriff called in a loud whisper. "Is Caesar there?" "Yes, he's here," replied the voice which Burr recognized as that of the Frenchman. Then voices inside the house began to murmur in short sentences and finally the Frenchman called:

"Wait a minute," and steps were heard inside the house. Then suddenly a dog began to growl and bark. The Frenchman grumbled "shut up, shut up" at him with a string of oaths, but he kept on growling until Burr heard a short cut, a whine, and the dog was still. An inside door was opened. Then the bolt of the outside door shot back with a startling click. The door itself creaked and opened.

Then there was a bang as of a fallen beam, a rush of feet and a startled voice called:

“'Cre, cre mon Dieu, Caesaire.”

Burr plunged forward toward the house. He saw a swaying mass of figures, then the flash of a shot, followed by the report. A man broke from the group, leaped down the steps and started towards him. Burr recognized the rough, small head of the negro, Freeman, and he raised his rifle. As he did so, the negro suddenly caught sight of him and like a flash Burr saw him lift up a pistol. But Burr's own rifle was at his shoulder and instinctively he pulled the trigger. The gun seemed to roar and the flash to blot out everything, but Burr heard the negro shriek, saw him throw his arm into the air and flop down in a lump. But at almost the same minute, two men, one after the other, dashed off the porch with a curse from one of them. Then Burr's eyes were burned with a sudden flash, a hand, hard as steel, accompanied by a searing streak of flame and a myriad of stars seemed to shoot from his cheek across his eyes and he felt a blow of unimaginable strength and hardness.

III

The light was growing stronger in the city streets and the steps of the early passers began to echo on the sidewalks. A milk cart or two rattled over the cobblestones of a side street, while an ambitious maid in a white apron appeared with mop and pail to scrub the steps of a brown stone house.

The shades of Alice Walton's room were growing lighter and lighter when a maid entered and handed her a folded newspaper, with the comment, "From Mr. Adrian, and he said you must get it at once."

Nervously, already hoping the truth, Alice turned the pages. There, sure enough was the penciled item:

"Wittersville, June—The fight at Barringford was proved today to be not as bad as reported. There was but one man killed, the negro, Freeman. The Frenchman, La-grand, who was concerned in the affair, was captured on Bald mountain last night. Deputy Barrett, who was reported as having a fractured skull, was in reality only stunned, while Deputy Burr, reported as killed, suffered only a severe scalp wound."

P. E. Curtiss.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PAST

TRINITY men of classes earlier than, say, 1890, will remember with an affectionate smile how the late Dr. Pynchon was accustomed to write out in full whatever he might wish to say upon any formal occasion.

In sorting over a mass of papers found among Dr. Pynchon's effects, the Secretary of the Faculty came upon the manuscript given below. It is an address to the class of '80 as they were matriculated on December 20, 1876. How characteristic it is; how exactly like the good old Doctor. No one else could have written it. The older Alumni, as they read, will hear the smooth, well-modulated voice pronouncing the successive sentences, and will think of many things.

And what good teaching it is—as simple as the ten commandments; and, like them, based on principles that are eternal!

F. S. L.

“December 20th, 1876.

“YOUNG GENTLEMEN:

“We propose at this time to confer upon you all the privileges of full membership in our Academic Body. For thus far you have simply been Probationers in residence, within the walls, and not members, strictly speaking, of the College.

“These privileges are of the highest value, because they bring you into an organic connection with a large number of Scholars, and distinguished persons whose names are inscribed on our Roll, not simply those who are living, but also those who are dead, and from this connection you become entitled to a degree of consideration and regard very much superior to any that you have heretofore received. Before admitting you, however, to the full enjoyment of this dignified position, and of the Rights and Privileges to which it entitles you, it is necessary that you on your part should enter into some engagement, to respect the Laws of the College, to conform to her customs, to maintain her usages, and to defend her Rights; in short, that you should now take, as it were, an oath of allegiance, and vow of obedience, in our presence as the Representatives of the Academic Body. This Vow and Promise we regard as one of the most solemn nature, and its violation as an act of the greatest impropriety, and deserving of the highest censure, and if repeated as worthy of degradation from membership and having your names struck from the roll.

“To receive your promise, then, and to invest you with the rights and privileges of membership is what we have now come together to do. I will therefore ask the Secretary to read the pledge.”

THE COLLEGE MEN'S POLITICAL ASSOCIATION

[For the benefit of the students who did not hear Mr. Nims when he made his address here in April we print the following article. We strongly approve of its object and feel that it will commend itself to anyone who has at heart the political welfare of his country.—EDITORS.]

THE College Men's Political Association of New York City, which has now entered upon its second year of work, was formed to encourage college men to take an active and practical interest in politics. It is entirely non-partisan, numbering among its members men of all parties.

The organization of the Association grew out of a meeting of college men at the house of President Roosevelt in Oyster Bay some years ago, which meeting was called to discuss ways and means of bringing about a more widespread interest in politics among college men.

The Association works along two lines. (1) It has suggested the organization of political clubs in the colleges; and already, largely through its instrumentality, such clubs have been formed at Brown, Dartmouth, Princeton, Williams and Yale. At several other institutions work preparatory to organizing a club is now being done. At Harvard the Association has co-operated with the Harvard Political Club, and the Cornell Congress is planning to do work in Cornell next year, similar to what is now being done by the Harvard Club, and at various times speakers of prominence from New York City have addressed these clubs upon matters of practical political interest. (2) The Association is making a systematic effort to bring the college graduate into touch with the New York district leaders of the party to which he belongs. Last year letters were sent to all Seniors of whom the Association could learn, who were planning to settle in New York, and, as the result, a large number of them were brought into direct relation with the leaders of the Democratic and Republican parties, in and near the city. In this way these men were able to learn something about practical politics more quickly than they otherwise could have done.

The office of the Association is at 32 Nassau Street, Room 552, and its facilities are at the service of any college men coming to New York. All such men, whether they desire to avail themselves of the services of the Association or not, are urged to send their names, with their home and New York addresses, to the Secretary, in order that the Association may notify them from time to time of opportunities for political service which are brought to its attention, and also that it may preserve as complete a list as possible of the college men in the city.

The officers for the current year are as follows: President, Austen G. Fox, Harvard '69; Treasurer, George T. Adee, Yale '95; Secretary, Harry D. Nims, Williams '98. Executive Committee, F. Gordon Brown, Yale '01; R. Bayard Cutting, Harvard '97; Frederick P. Keppel, Columbia '98, and Travis Whitney, Harvard '00.

COLLEGE AND CAMPUS.

SATURDAY morning, May 20th, Mr. Samuel Ferguson, C. E., '96, delivered a lecture in the Physics Laboratory on the General Electric Company's Mercury Arc Rectifier.

Dravo, '07, catcher on the 'Varsity baseball team, has recovered from his injury received in the Syracuse-Trinity game and is back attending to his collegiate duties.

It is expected that the college will build, during the summer vacation, two residences on the lot west of Prof. Johnson's home on Vernon street. The houses will be occupied by Professors Brenton and Merrill.

The class of 1908 has adopted special rules regulating the wearing of class numerals.

A number of changes will be made on the staff of the Tripod. We note the following: Huet, '06, will be advanced to the position of Editor-in-Chief; Barbour, '06, will assume the duties of Managing Editor; Hedrick, '07, will be Business Manager; Bowne, '06, and Butterworth, '08, will be in charge of the Alumni department.

The Athletic Association has elected the following officers for next year: President, Fiske, '06; Secretary and Treasurer, G. A. Cunningham, '07; Manager of the Track Team, Haight, '06; Manager of the Baseball Team, George, '07; Assistant Manager of the Baseball Team, Cross, '08; Assistant Manager of the Track Team, Hardcastle, '08.

Medusa Head, the the senior honorary society, has announced the following elections from the class of 1906: Garrett D. Bowne, Jr., of Hartford; Daniel W. Gateson of Brooklyn, N. Y.; W. S. W. Fiske, of Providence, R. I.; Owen Morgan of Dallas, Texas; Frederick C. Hinkel of New York City; Austin D. Haight of Brooklyn, N. Y.; John F. Powell of Allentown, Pa.

Memorial Day morning President Luther delivered a memorial address in East Killingly, Connecticut.

Beginning with the next collegiate year it is planned to unite the different branches of religious work in college under one head. The Missionary Society and the Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be departments of the new organization. The association as planned will be conducted along lines similar to the Y. M. C. A. rather than being bound to the work of the church.

Professor Brenton was a guest of honor at the recent celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of St. Mark's School at Southboro, Mass. Professor Brenton read a paper on "Church Colleges."

Friday evening, June 2d, the first annual debate between Rutgers and Trinity was held in Alumni Hall. Dr. Luther presided. The question under discussion was "Resolved, That the workingmen who refuse to join a union act in furtherance of the best interests of the country." Rutgers upheld the affirmative. Both the visiting team and the local team presented a strong argument and the judges were compelled to render a close decision, the debate being awarded to the Rutgers team. The judges were Ex-Governor George P. McLean (chairman), Professor Alfred P. Dennis of Smith College and Professor James W. Crook of Amherst College.

President Luther preached the baccalaureate sermon at the Holderness School, Plymouth, N. H., Sunday, June 4th.

The stockholders of the Trinity College Floating Laboratory held their first meeting at the home of Dr. Luther, Monday evening, June 5th. General plans for the laboratory were discussed and a committee consisting of Professor Edwards, Shiras Morris, '96, and A. D. Haight, '06, was appointed by the chair to draw up a constitution, by-laws, plan of organization, etc.

The association for promoting the interests of church schools, colleges and seminaries has awarded, as a result of its recent examinations, the following prizes to Trinity men: First prize in Latin, seniors and juniors, E. S. Carr, '05. First prize in Greek, seniors and juniors, E. S. Carr, '05. First prize in Physics, sophomores and freshmen, F. C. Hedrick, '07. Second prize in English, sophomores and freshmen, F. C. Hedrick, '07. First prizes are each one hundred dollars and second prizes fifty dollars.

President Luther will preach the baccalaureate sermon to the senior class in Christ Church, Sunday evening, June 25th.

Sunday, May 28th, President Luther was the special preacher in Battell Chapel, Yale University.

ATHLETICS.

Trinity 2—Wesleyan 3.

On Memorial Day Trinity lost the first game of a doubleheader to Wesleyan by score of 3-2. The batting honors were even, Badgely and Clark each being touched six times safely. Landefeld was behind the bat and Powell covered third base. Randall took Powell's place at short. Burwell for Trinity and Anderson of Wesleyan carried off the individual batting honors. Trinity scored in the sixth. Burwell doubled, Randall sacrificed and Badgely doubled, scoring Burwell. The next were easy outs. In the seventh session, Madden fanned, Clement singled to right, Bowman struck out, Burwell hit safely to left and the ball passed Monroe, Clement scoring. In the eighth Monroe singled and was forced at second, Anderson hit safe to left field, Haley was safe on fielder's choice filling the bases, Smith flied out to Bowman but Morgan came home on the throw in. Day knocked a high fly to short left. Both Randall and Bowman waited on each other and the ball dropped safe. Haley and Anderson raced home. No further scoring.

Trinity 3—Wesleyan 0.

In the afternoon game, Badgely was opposed by Monroe. Badgely allowed but two hits while Monroe was found safely six times. Wesleyan figured in the error column four times while only two misplays were charged against Trinity. Sensational catches were furnished by Morgan of Trinity. Badgely backed up his beautiful pitching by two hits. Two double plays were gotten away with by Trinity. Bowman led off with a single in the seventh and took second on an error Burwell sacrificed neatly. Dravo singled along the third base line and Bowman cantered home. In the eighth Morgan drew a pass but was snuffed at second on Landefeld's grounder, Powell doubled and Landefeld came in. Madden hit to Monroe but was out for running off of base line. Powell scored. Clement wound up the inning by fanning. The infield was complete for the first time in three weeks and Dravo's presence behind the bat added materially to the playing unit of the team.

Trinity 10—W. P. 1.

In a baseball parody Trinity won from Worcester Polytechnic Institute by score of 10-1. Badgely was started in the game but as soon as it was discovered that there was no danger, Hyde was sent in to pitch. He held the game in hand and would have had a shut out but for slow outfielding. Badgely liked the delivery of Molene and hit him for three clean singles. Morgan's three-base hit was the only event to vary the monotony.

Trinity 3—Williams 10.

Williams won from Trinity on Saturday, June 3rd, by touching Bowman for five hits of which three were for extra bases. Together with these five bingles came a base on balls, a passed ball, and a piece of poor judgment. This netted five runs. Two runs were scored in the second on Westervelt's homer. In the ninth three more crossed the plate. For Trinity Randall acquitted himself favorably in the field, while Powell and Burwell managed to sneak in a hit every time they were at bat. Only one error was credited to the home team.

EXCHANGES

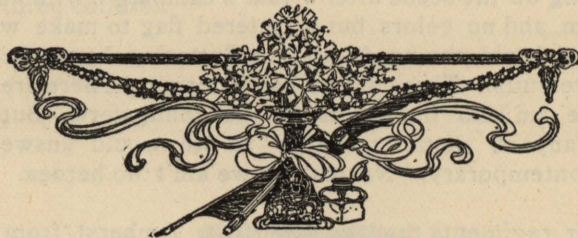

WE have begun already to receive the Commencement issues with their brilliant covers, their long reviews and their set, conventional farewell editorials. We began to read all these with a cynical smile and enjoyed with a lofty humor the well-known phrases of such a sort as "four long years have passed since first we came here, etc." One is always inclined to laugh at conventional sentiment. But when we realize that we too had a farewell to make the thing assumed a different tone. Our year is over. The next number will be published by the members of the new board. Their first issue will be a special commencement number. They will have a new cover, editorials of welcome, and boundless enthusiasm. This is the last regular number and we of the old board feel like the dusty, stained regiment of the regulars, tramping off the scene after a year's campaign, with no music but a single drum and no colors but a tattered flag to make way for the dash, the gold braid, the bands and the fluttering banners of the new regiment of recruits. There are no bands for us. There are no cheers. Behind us we can hear the shouts for the youngsters. But we are in silence. If anyone should question us we would answer like our proverbial contemporary, "No ma'am, we ain't no heroes. We're the regulars."

The other regiments that we meet from Amherst, from Wesleyan, from Bowdoin, or from far-off Minnesota, all tell the same tale. We have sat around the camp fire with them for a fall, a winter and a spring. At first we were jealous of each other. Our columns were towering with lofty contempt. No effort that anyone of us could put forth would escape a shower of scathing criticism from the rest. But then we came to know each other and our criticisms were made less harsh. We tried and failed ourselves and with our failures we found ourselves more kindly toward the failures of others. At first we greeted success suspiciously and always found some flaw with which to qualify our praise. But now we greet success with whole hearted applause and the news of something accomplished rings with warm congratulation through all the camp. May those who are to come enjoy their battles side by side as we have enjoyed ours.

We are reminded of that little story that all of us read in our first French book. You remember it—“La Dernière Classe.”

“Au meme moment les trompettes des Prussiens qui revenaient de l'exercice eclaterent sous nos fenetres. * * * M. Hamel se leva, tout pale, dans sa chaire. * * * ‘Mes amis,’ dit-il, ‘je-je mais quelque chose l’etouffait;’ il ne pouvait pas achever sa phrase. * * * Puis il resta la, la tete appuyee au mur, et, sans parler, avec sa main, il nous faisait signe, ‘c’est fini—allez vous en.’”

TRINITY COLLEGE, Hartford, Conn.

Trinity College, under the name of Washington College, received its charter in 1823. The present name was adopted in 1845. Its chief founder was the Right Rev. Thomas Church Brownell, Bishop of Connecticut. Established by Episcopalians as a contribution to higher education, it is not a Church institution in the sense of being directed by the Church. Its advantages are placed at the service of those of every creed.

Formerly on site of present State Capitol, it was transferred in 1878 to new buildings in the southwestern part of the city. The principal of these, in the English Secular Gothic style, 653 feet long—including Jarvis and Seabury Halls and Northam Towers, is one of the most imposing and admirably fitted educational edifices in the United States. It was intended to form the west side of a great quad, range. Outside of the lines of this quadrangle on the south, are the Observatory, the Boardman Hall of Natural History, and the Jarvis Laboratories for Chemistry and for Physics. To the north of it are the Gymnasium, houses of the President and Professors, and Chapter Houses of the Fraternities. Below the College Campus to the east and within three minutes' walk, is the spacious Athletic field. In beauty of situation, healthful conditions of life, and equipment for its special work, the College is not surpassed.

The College has distinct courses of four years in Arts, Science, Letters and Science, and in Letters. The Faculty includes thirteen professors, seven instructors, five lecturers, librarian, medical director. Among the Elective studies within the respective courses there is no important subject for which adequate provision is not made.

Properly qualified candidates not desiring to pursue all of the studies of any course are allowed as Special Students to pursue certain subjects, receiving certificates for work satisfactorily accomplished.

The Library contains 48,000 volumes. Generous contributions of the Alumni are making possible a rapid addition to its resources. A Reference Reading Room is open every day and five evenings of the week.

The Jarvis Chemical and Physical Laboratories have every equipment for the most advanced work. The Hall of Natural History contains the museum and Biological laboratories provided with the most modern appliances.

In the year 1903-1904 a full technical course in Civil Engineering was for the first time made available for all qualified applicants.

There are numerous scholarships providing pecuniary assistance for deserving students. The three Holland Scholarships, yielding each $600 per annum, are awarded to the three best students in the three lower classes respectively. The Russell Graduate Fellowship of $400 is awarded biennially in the interest of higher graduate study. Prizes to the amount of $500 are also awarded to undergraduates for success in the work of the various departments.

Two examinations for admission are held at the college in each year, the first on the three days following the Annual Commencement, and the second in September, immediately before the beginning of the Christmas term.

For Catalogues, Examination papers, or information, apply to the President or Secretary of the Faculty.

An Interesting Fact.

On the 1st of March, 1904, The Connecticut Mutual reached a stage in its history very interesting to its management and its members and one which is unique in the history of American Life Insurance.

On this date, but little more than fifty-eight years from its organization, it had received from its members in premiums the sum of $228,376,268, and had returned to them or their beneficiaries $228,724,073, or $347,805 more than it had received

The Connecticut Mutual is the first American Life Insurance Company to return to its members one hundred per cent. of its receipts from them. And it holds besides $65,000,000, of assets, with a surplus of over $4,600,000 to protect over 70,000 policy-holders insured for over $166,000,000.
