PROFESSOR BORCHARD OF YALE SAYS WORLD WAR AGAIN IMMINENT

Compares Present with 1914 in Talk to Political Science Teachers Here Saturday

Declares Current Peace Plans Will Only Lead to War-Four Others Speak

"Another World War is Imminent," declared Professor Edwin M. Borchard of Yale, at the Fourth Annual Meeting of the Connecticut Valley Teachers of Political Science, held at Trinity College on Saturday, May 26. Professor Borchard, in an address to the representatives from seven colleges of the Connecticut Valley, stated that in his opinion conditions at present are the same as they were from 1914 to 1917.

The World War has never ceased, he declared. This is only a time of truce, and the disintegration of the Arms Reduction Conference makes plain the fact that we are in danger of another war. Europe's peace proposals are intended to lead us into the next war. Foremost among these is the plan of collective sanctions; that is, if one nation is the aggressor in a war, the rest of the world attacks this country and restores peace.

"The idea that collective sanctions could preserve the peace has brought us to the political debacle of the present," Professor Borchard said. Europe would decide which country was the idea of the aggressor and declare an embargo on that country would be tantamount to a declaration of war. There is ceaseless propaganda being spread through this country at present to get us to sign such proposals which will involve us in European wars of the future. It is the duty of people teaching the social sciences to be able to see through such diplomacy and realize that it lacks the essential foundation in human experience which would make it successful. Our salvation lies. Professor Borchard declared. in an observation of international law and a preservation of strict neutrality with more dependence on the "no foreign entanglements" ideal of Washington and Jefferson.

Mr. Rollin B. Posey, the director of Hartford's new Municipal Research Bureau, gave a short talk on "What Do Municipal Research Bureaus Expect of the College?" The answer. he said, was "Plenty". Municipal research bureaus are the laboratories of political science, run by men who are not working for the usual political rewards of money and power but to find the best way to run a city government. At present there is a need for more men to help in the work, and it is up to the political science departments of colleges to produce them.

Miss Katherine S. Day told the group about Hartford's Civic Summer School. This school was organized three summers ago and has enjoyed great success from its inception. Miss Day asked for continued support from the colleges to insure the continued increase of civic knowledge.

In the afternoon the group met at Cook Dormitory and proceeded in cars to various points of historical interest in the city, including the site of the Charter Oak and the Mark Twain the ball on the part of Psi U. and to House. At the Old State House Mr. William E. Buckley gave a short talk on "The Political Phase of the Hart-(Continued on page 4.)

ATHENAEUM DEBATES WITH WESLEYAN ON WTIC

Dumont-Senf Oppose Abrogation of Platt Amendment Against Murdoch and Lane

On Saturday, April 19, over radio, station WTIC, the Athenaeum Debating team of Trinity and a Wesleyan team argued from 8 to 8.30 p.m. on the question, "Resolved, That the Platt Amendment to the Cuban Constitution Be Abrogated." This amendment to the Cuban Constitution gives the United States the right to intervene in Cuba when asked to do so by Cuba or at the discretion of the United States.

Mr. George Murdoch, '34, was the At 7.45 p. m., the Junior class first speaker for Wesleyan. He opened the affirmative side of the argument. He pointed out that our interests in Cuba were primarily of a selfish nature, that Cuba served as a parade ground for capitalists who exploited it unscrupulously.

Mr. Charles Lane, second Wesleyan man, recited the "atrocities" caused by the Platt Bill and went on to say that for the benefit of Cuba, American capitalists should evacuate the island. and the Platt Amendment should be abrogated.

Mr. Frederick Senf then concluded the Trinity argument. He carried on Mr. Dumont's speech, showing that the reason why the Platt Amendment was passed in the first place is still of paramount importance as evidenced by the continued economic and social growth of Cuba. He pointed out that the investment of $1,400,000,000 in Cuba has raised the per capita wealth

THE STUDENTS APPROVE

The experiment of having one o'clock chapel services last week was a success, and we believe that the large attendance and general interest calls for the adoption of this hour as the time for regular services in the future.

It was unusual to see the entire pew section filled with students who gave respectful attention to the service instead of devoting their efforts to textbooks or audible conversation. had a feeling of unity that has been lacking in past services. The short address by a Faculty member is an excellent feature, and we hope that this will become a permanent part of the service, should it be continued. The entire scheme contributes definitely toward a satisfactory compromise on the question of compulsory

We might make one suggestion: next year would it be possible for members of the student body—particularly those men who are studying for the ministry—to alternate with the Faculty in addressing the group? This would relieve our professors of too frequent talks and at the same time give valuable experience to a number of undergraduates.

COOK LOUNGE FOR EVERYONE

As the Trinity term for 1934 is nearly over, we begin to look to next fall and what it will bring. It is with this in mind that we offer a suggestion that we hope will prove beneficial to the student body of the College. Cook Hall Lounge has in the past been restricted in its use to social functions and meetings of the Senate, Faculty, and other organizations both on and off the campus. Why not allow the college body to have the freedom of the Lounge? The chief objections to this move seem to lie in the minds of the members of the Faculty, who are afraid that damage to the rugs and furniture by careless usage and cigarette burns would render the Lounge unfitted for the social functions that take place there during the course of the year. It is our opinion that if warned that the Lounge would be closed immediately should any careless abuse of the new privilege manifest itself, the student body would be more than careful to conduct itself properly while on the premises, in order that the use of the Lounge might not be discontinued. We know that the Neutral body in particular is more than anxious to be allowed He seldom expressed them, at least However, this would not solve our the privilege of its space for study and conversation. We suggest in writing, possibly because they were problem entirely. that it be opened to the student body at certain nours next tall with the proper stipulations concerning its use, and feel sure that the privilege will not be abused.

BOOK REVIEW

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFEL- tration of it." To this "passion for Odell LOW, by American Book Company, 1934.

It is refreshing to hear a new note on Longfellow; to read criticism based upon understanding and thorough consideration of all things relating to the poet. As Prof. Shepard quotes in his introduction, setting out to criticise Longfellow is "like carrying a rifle into a national park." Just as there are some people who take a vicious delight in that sort of thing, there are many modern critics who regard Longfellow as a target for contempt, or, at best, pity. Their attitude has embodied the idea that he was "hopelessly Victorian, bourgeois, homiletic, decent, and clear." In order to prevent a too careless acceptance of this idea, Prof. Shepard has considered Longfellow with an effort to "read his writings somewhat as they were read by his contemporaries and also with the perspective of a century of time." In doing this he has studied the factors in the poet's work as they were derived from his environment, opinions, and limitations. He says: 'Longfellow's work is of utmost value to America in her effort to see what she has been and what, therefore, she is and is to be. It is true that he has little to say about the America of his time, and that his remarks about the America of any time are seldom acute; yet in the total temper of his mind he represents us, without fully intending it, more truly than other poets do who intend little else. Considering this, and also the range and depth of his influence upon us, it is clear that no view of American culture which leaves him out or treats him with contempt can be either sound or complete. Those who think him a great poet may be naive, but those who think him unworthy of careful consideration are something worse than that."

As to his environment, Longfellow was uncommonly fortunate. There is a justifiable feeling that he might have made more of it. He was born in 1807, and thus had as contemporaries Emerson, Hawthorne, Holmes, Thoreau, and Melville, men whom he knew personally and from whose intellectual depth he, himself, might have been inspired to deeper mental soundings. Moreover, "the span of his life coincided almost exactly with the rise, culmination, and decline of a remarkable intellectual movement in New England," a movement developing largely from the ideology of Calvinism, Platonism, and Humanitarianism which came to America from France, England, and Germany.

The poet's opinions, political, religious, economic and social were, as far as can be discerned, entirely proper and acceptable for his time. was simple, unquestioning, and by doubt or strengthened by struggle." lived in affluence, and presumed that indefinitely prosperous and untroubled. Accordingly, social problems were to him not pressing. He liked the social set-up which had always been kind to him. His friends were of them, so he was satisfied. Shepard; the past", says Professor Shepard, "there is perhaps no serious objection except that (for a poet) it was not after all very passionate, that it did not go far enough, and that it failed to bring antiquity down to date. He did not have the more intense historical imagination by which one sees the past as a living and a present thing." His indifference to the outer world was reflected in his writing which was, as he felt literature should be, 'soothing, edifying, an expression of a somewhat vague because a universal benevolence."

Prof. Shepard comments at length upon the world-wide popularity of Longfellow's work. It was superficial (making no pretense of being otherwise), it was moral, it appealed to a middle class sentiment and emotion, and, withal, it had beauty of form and expression. If Longfellow is not popular today, it may well be because we try to judge him by too rigid modern standards. Only occasionally does he come within their range, as, for example, in his sonnets. It is quite possible that he has something of the unique in his make-up, and certainly it is not to be decried as not conforming to the popular notion of excellence. The "literary fashions," themselves, change too often.

I feel hesitant in dealing with the verse selections in this book, for I lack a broad acquaintance with the poet's work. Among the old standbys, there are also many poems here which I met for the first time. The twenty-two sonnets, some, of course, poems in themselves, and some, stanzaic forms of longer poems, are highly worth-while. They merit careful and sympathetic reading by anyone who has absorbed too thoughtlessly the current sniggering attitude toward Longfellow.

The book is probably fated to spend a quiet, respectable shelf-life, to find its way now and then into the hands of a scholar or a shy devotee to "Hiawatha" and "Evangeline." Then may that honest reader find in the introduction wise defense of the man he admires and the poems he loves. —J. R. M.

drives and ran the paths like a demon. In the other two first round matches, Delta Phi defeated Alpha Tau Kappa, and Delta Kappa Epsilon won from the Neutral Golds. The scores of these matches are not available because nobody seems to know what the score really is, the contestants themselves being able to give estimates only, and the referee declining to comment.

In the second round Sigma Nu defeated Alpha Chi Rho in a garrison finish by the score of 13 to 12. The fielding, hitting, and pitching was equally good on both sides, but the Crows were caught napping in the last half of the seventh, and some anonymous Sigma Nu stole home and won the ball game.

The other second round match was also close; the Deke's just managing to squeak through over the Delta Phi's to win by the score of 4 to 3. The excellent fielding on the part of both teams probably had something to do with the fact that there were not many hits, but the boys were definitely off their game so far as batting went.

By virtue of their second victory, the Deke's entered the finals of the tournament. The other finalist will be determined by the match between Sigma Nu and Delta Psi. This game should be a close one, but the Delta Psi battery of Al and Gatchel seems to be unbeatable.
