SPRING has come, and brings with it the twenty-seventh volume of THE TRINITY IVY, bearing the numerals which will recall to at least a few one of the happiest periods of our life.

It has been the endeavor of the Board to introduce, with the regular stereotype matter, a few new features, which we hope will interest, not offend, our readers. Further, we have tried to make our little volume distinctively a "class book," remembering, at the same time, that it must also serve as a diary of the whole college life.

We take this opportunity of expressing our sincere regret for the loss our Alma Mater has sustained in the resignation of two of her oldest and dearest professors. Both of these gentlemen have been closely connected with this institution for a number of years, and their kindly advice and earnest interest in the student body will never be forgotten by those who had the good fortune of knowing them, and receiving instruction from their incalculable store of knowledge. It is from the example and instruction of such men that the graduates of our Alma Mater receive that individuality which is said to mark a Trinity man.

And so we launch the 1900 Ivy upon the sea of criticism, and may that sea be gracious unto it; insomuch that it may safely "reach the haven where it would be"—the hearts of the true and loyal sons of Trinity College.

The editors wish to express their sincere gratitude to all who may in any way have assisted them in the production of this book, by literary or artistic contributions.
Trinity College.

The charter of Washington College was granted in 1823 by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut; and by vote of the Trustees, in consequence of the liberal gifts of the citizens of Hartford, the College was located in that city. In 1845, on the petition of the Alumni and the Corporation, the name of the College was changed to Trinity College.

This College has no preparatory department or professional schools for graduates, but its purpose is to afford the opportunity for obtaining a liberal education—that is, an education conducted without reference to any future particular profession, calling, or special pursuit on the part of the student. The requirements for admission and the course of instruction for degrees in the Arts have always been practically the same as in the other New England Colleges.

Expenses.

The amount of the Treasurer's bill each year is as follows:

- Tuition: $100.00
- Room-rent for each person, from $100.00 to: 35.00
- Incidents: 30.00
- Heat: 12.50

Total from $242.00 to $177.50

There are, besides, fees for the use of the Chemical and Physical Laboratories.

Board is furnished in the College at $4.50 per week. Students may obtain board at private houses in the neighborhood, at rates greater or less, as they may desire. To this must be added laundry charges, together with the expense of books, furniture, clothing, travel and society fees, which vary according to the taste and habits of the student, and of which no estimate can be given.

Scholarships.

The amount of the Treasurer's bills can be considerably reduced to holders of scholarships. The income of these scholarships, which are of different values, is placed to the credit of students with limited means, and serves to meet the charges for tuition and room-rent in whole or in part.

For holders of scholarships remitting the entire charges for tuition and room-rent, the Treasurer's bill is reduced to $42.50; and the necessary expenses of such students, including board and other personal items, will not exceed $250 or $300 a year.
Rooms and Buildings.

The new buildings were commenced in 1875. They are thoroughly drained, well ventilated, and unsurpassed for convenience and comfort. In 1881 the Northam gateway was begun, and the western side of the great quadrangle is now completed. Easy access from the city is secured by means of street-cars running to the College grounds. An excellent athletic ground is provided for ball-playing and other outdoor sports; there are also several tennis courts, and an excellent gymnasium. Most of the rooms are arranged so as to provide for two students rooming together, a common study, and separate bedrooms. All the rooms and hallways are heated by steam, and ventilation is secured by open fireplaces. Water is carried to every floor.

The site of the building is remarkable for its healthfulness.

The Gymnasium and Alumni Hall.

The new Gymnasium and Alumni Hall (or Theatre) stands to the east of the proposed north quadrangle, near the driveway from Vernon street, and faces the west.

It is substantially built of brick and laid in red mortar, with a finish of Portland sandstone. The frontage is fifty-six feet, and the length one hundred and six feet. The entrance is at the level of the running track of the gymnasium; from the vestibule ample stairways lead down to the latter and up to the theatre, which has a seating capacity of 500. The equipment of the gymnasium embraces modern apparatus, and the latest patent appliances in this department. An instructor in athletics is in charge of the building.

The Jarvis Laboratories.

This building is built of brick in early French Romanesque style, and is two stories high with a basement, having a frontage of seventy-nine feet, and a depth of sixty-five feet. The angles of the building are emphasized by large ventilating turrets, which not only serve a practical purpose, but add greatly to the breadth of the wall-mass. The main object in constructing this building has been to make ample provision for laboratory work in chemistry and physics. The physical laboratory is equipped with a dynamo and engine, and the rooms have been arranged with special reference to making facilities for practical work as complete as possible. The equipment in the chemical laboratory is such as is required for good work in qualitative and quantitative analysis and assaying.

Catalogues.

Catalogues and Examination Papers may be had on application to the Secretary of the Faculty. For Scholarships and general information, application should be made to the President.

24
GENTLE reader of The Ivy, I see your look of questioning surprise as you ask yourself, "Can it be that those freshmen of but yesterday are the seniors of today?" I reply, "Does the time seem short to you? Then, believe me, it seems doubly so to us." But the proofs are at hand. You will find our record complete. Ere this volume reaches you, your freshman of yesterday will have taken his ninety hours of required cuts in recitations, his one hundred and eleven cuts in chapel—not including those he used to take at night in his freshman year for having thought he had gone in the morning. He will have received his full quota of honorable scars on the foot ball and base ball fields; will have danced his eighteen appointed Germans, will have celebrated with Hibernian enthusiasm his four St. Patrick's Days, the Faculty's Ides of March—in short, will have qualified in all essential respects for the reception of his degree.

One or two more facts may help to show you that, though the time seems short, it has not been uneventful. It has been '99's privilege to witness the grandest ovation Trinity ever accorded a victorious team, and the conflagration of more broken-windowed, whitewashed, unsightly architecture than any class in college, and to watch in turn the erection of the most artistic addition of recent years to the number of the College buildings, and, by the way, one of the many diversified uses of Martin Hall, for some time undiscovered, has just come to light. The commodious accommodations for Hebrew, French and Drawing are minor matters compared to the fact that, located within easy view of the mathematical room, it affords Prof. Luther's classes a permanent example of the triangle, the square, the cube, the pyramid and the nonahedron all in one.

How much might be said to show you that, measured by our achievements, too, the course of '99 has been a long one. But the historian forbears to weary you. The man doubtful of his claims to some coveted recognition tries to arouse conviction by boisterously proclaiming them. The man who has experienced, with Bacon, the "incomparable pleasure of standing upon the vantage ground of truth," has a degree of enjoyment that depends but little upon whether the world investigates his claims or not. Suffice it to say that '99 has played her part faithfully in every department of college activity, has entered into the social world too much to make the final parting easy, and incidentally has produced the first optimus of the last eighteen years.

She has been more than a mere preserver of traditions. She has restored some—yes, even created some. Duck-on-the-rock was dragged from out the debris of the iconoclasts. The Sophomore Dining Club is a tradition that owes its origin to the natural conviviality of '99. It is hoped that out of courtesy this tradition will prolong, or, if necessary, revive its existence until after the coming Class Day.

But precious time is fleeting. Let all vain babblings cease. Let all rivalries be over. Let tranquility be queen. '99 has suffered her defeats, but to day victor and vanquished alike are embraced in the one sentiment of friendliness and good feeling. Bygones are bygones and all old scores are forgotten. Then cheer on, ye college men, for our dear old Alma Mater. It relieves the senior's sadness and tells him others still love her too.

Classmates, draw closer—draw closer. Let me feel the honest grasp of your strong hand again. It is not merely the passing of a class—a century goes with us. C. B. H.

1900 Class History.

WHEN we look back on things that were—now surrounded by the gloom of antiquity—we almost resent the joy with which we entered upon our Sophomore year. What blatant self-complacency! Truly did we think that we had only to show ourselves to be immediately exalted to the loftiest pinnacles of public admiration. No doubt we deserved that favorite expletive, "consummate asses," which was wont to fall from the lips of that dear Professor to whom this volume is dedicated. But now all things are changed—the past with soft garment veils the angular outline into symmetry. With sorrow we laid down the toys of childhood and in stern resolve took up our duty of regulating college morals (and other things too numerous to mention). How we have succeeded remains for the future to reveal. If our class now contained all the men with whom its life commenced, our "moral persuasion" could not have been withstood by even the most devoted underclassman debauche. But they have gone and how we do miss them.

Our successes in things scholastic are too well known to need further comment here, except in the Shakespeare course, where one of our men rendered Hamlet with such beauty of pronunciation that the Professor in charge called upon his Satanic majesty in admiration.

In regard to athletics, our fame has gone forth through the length and breadth of the land; so remarkable has been our prowess that nowadays when a town girl sees any powerfully built young man with the Apollo cast of countenance she turns to her chum and says: "There is one of the Trinity athletes."
"What class?"
"Oh, '1900,' of course; all athletes are in '1900' and all '1900' men are athletes."

On the night of February 16, 1897, occurred an event which knit the scattered atoms of our class into such molecular consistency that then and there "1900" took her place—a power in the college world. I refer to the "'98 from 1900" banquet. What one of us can forget the stirring incidents of that night? Then comes an hiatus of two years and again we sat at table in a body, this time not as hosts, but guests. Any one who doubts the excellency of our entertainment needs but to read the menu of that dinner, where the feast of dainties and flowing bowl were surpassed only by the feast of reason and flow of soul. We thank you, "1902".

It is the pleasant duty of the historian to assure the College that at least three members of 1900 have declared their intention of graduating from Trinity, so no one need feel alarmed if we lose a few men before that class day, when for a last sad time we will wake the echoes with our Wo-te-widee-wo.

Hartford society will miss us when we go, since such determined and successful "fussers" as we, were never seen before in this almost quaint New England town.

Here must the record end, lest the "niggardly page" be expanded to a volume filled with the successes of 1900, who, true to its motto, is indeed always ready. P. L. B.

THE cigarette of our Freshman year has been for a long time cast aside, and already the pipe of the Sophomore is almost smoked out, and we begin to hear the sizzling of the last ashes in the bowl as they warn us that it is almost time to discard the "traditional Sophomore recklessness" and assume the responsibilities of upperclassmen.

In looking back over our first year, we see, indeed, that we were not idle. Our class teams all played outside games; we won the Leffingwell cup, a thing not done by a Freshman class in years; our base ball team was victorious in the inter-class game, and an unusually large number of the class wore 'varsity sweaters.

And this year also, though with ranks depleted by having so many men on the football squad, we won the fight at the bulletin board, and it took five fierce rushes to decide the push-rush. The underclass meet was won too easily to be exciting, and the McCracken cup also came to us.

In college life, too, we have borne our part, ever ready to share in such events as the memorable parade on St. Pat's Day, and in "gatherings round the Bishop"; and we have, we must confess, caused the Faculty the usual amount of sleeplessness, and undergone the usual, perhaps more than the usual, amount of cross-examination and questioning, with regard to the now historic battle with the New Britain stage-hands, hotel-porters, et cetera, the "door-knob plot," and various other little escapades. Close observers have also reported that there is less polish on the Sophomore seats in chapel than usual, and—but an unkind power does not permit the historian to speak his mind on the subject.

But, as the time draws near when we will become upperclassmen, what matters to us, after all, the rivalries and jealousies of the past? Though we fought desperately in the three fierce "scrapes" of March 17th, and would have gone over with the staircase up to Alumni had it fallen rather than give an inch, why should we not forgive, even though we do not forget, and merging our individual life into the broader sphere of our college influence, strive in the future, to the exclusion of all else, to uphold the Old Gold and the Blue, be it here or in our after life?

"Novus Ordo Saeclorum." "A New Order of the Ages." We shall be the first class to graduate in the new century. As the new century will be an age of advancement and of progress, so may the class of 1901, strong in the spirit which binds us all together, ever labor for the honor and the glory of our Alma Mater, striving always so to do, that when we graduate we may leave behind us a name which shall be long remembered.

1902 Class History.

Perhaps no class has entered college with more zeal, more earnestness, and maybe more verdancy, than the class of 1902. But then we realize that our freshness is expected, and, indeed, it would be phenomenal if we did not possess it. Nevertheless, as one of our professors once told us, "Even if you are Freshmen, it is not necessary to exhibit an extraordinary degree of verdancy."

At the bulletin board we proved ourselves to be somewhat athletic and not altogether fed on bread and milk.

The pushrush was our next appearance in the field, and, as none of us knew exactly what sort of contrivance a pushrush was, we must have presented a strange spectacle when we appeared for instructions. But on being formed in a phalanx, à la Macedonian, and on being drilled at frequent intervals by our patient and much-enduring friends, we were able to do justice to Alexander's famous formation and to gain an almost unusual advantage over our rivals.

Afterward, the first opportunity to act as hosts was given us, and we endeavored, as well as our tender age would permit, to fulfill the proper duties, and, judging from the mirthful scene which followed, we succeeded well.

Things went merrily and we began to grow a little, when an occurrence happened which nearly stunted our growth. We were to compete with the much-feared Sophomore for the Underwood cup. Alas! the horror which filled us! We beheld defeat staring us in the face and our untaught and gentle natures scarce knew how to avoid it. The meet came and we fell.

There was still one hope, one chance of redemption, and that lay in giving our friends, the Juniors, a banquet. Plans were accordingly laid with the most strategic zeal, and, after various difficulties, we assembled en masse before a hospitable board and regaled ourselves with good company and good food.

The saddest event of our Freshman days was the sudden death of one of our number. James Whiting Allen had entered college with slender means and had endeavored to earn an education by thrift and self-denial. His courage and determination were admirable, but his strength failed him, and on October 25, 1898, we lost a classmate, cheerful, kind, and dear to all.

Our Freshman year is fast ebbing to the close. Some of our friends will leave us and misfortunes may fall upon us; but may we ever be faithful to our motto, ύπν πόνος, νυτερον νίκη, and to dear old Trinity.

"Come what may,
Time and the hour run through the roughest day."

The college year is now drawing swiftly to its close, an ending that means a beginning for some and for others has no special signification beyond the fact that they are promoted one grade in their college life; still, there is no one in our community that will not be asked by parents or friends what we have accomplished in various fields of action during the past year. Further, the record of one year, whether good or bad, serves as an indicator to subsequent workers in college affairs, whereby they may be emulated by the victories, and avoid and correct the errors. What makes the college life so full of interest and differentiates it from any other mode of existence is the spirit of change which ever and anon pervades it. This spirit of change is the twin sister of advancement, for in college life this continual change, both in the individual and the body politic, brings with it an advancement.

Our football season was not successful. Hampered in various ways, our team played an uphill season, and it was gratifying, both to them and to the college at large, that their last efforts were so satisfactory.

Although the basket ball team did not have very many games of importance or add any important victories to their previous record, still, according to The Tablet, the team was in better shape than it has been since '97.

Trinity week was a glorious success in every detail. The decorations for the Junior promenade were the handsomest that have ever graced Alumni Hall. That which is more pleasing to record, however, is the financial result, which beats all previous records. After paying every expense, there remained in the hands of the treasurer some seventy-five dollars.

Of all the improvements and advancements that change has created in our college organizations, none have been so fraught with success as the Dramatic Association and the Glee Club. The "Jesters" opened the season with the usual performance in Alumni Hall, presenting a drama in one act, "One Touch of Nature," and a short farce, entitled "All in a Fog." Several very successful trips were taken by the association, and the dramatic reputation of the College was fully maintained. The Glee and Mandolin Clubs, although they have only performed three times during the year, have shown a vast improvement over former years. The College is justly proud of both organizations.

The prospects for base ball are most encouraging this year, although lately the nine has been handicapped by the absence of several members of the Sophomore class. Several interesting games, both at home and abroad, have been arranged. It is most pleasing to chronicle that the debt hanging over the base ball nine for so many years has been entirely canceled.

And here our record for the year must end. May what has been developed for the better be further sustained by liberal praise; and, where there is need for improvement, let there be earnestness, which should be, and is, a synonym for college spirit. What possible good can it do our Alma Mater to say "Floreat Trinitas," unless we back up our sentiment with willing hands and loving hearts? Enthusiasm is not worth a fig, if it is not strong enough to carry us over the unendurable. Then let us think, when we say "Floreat Trinitas," may Trinity flourish and may her sons work.

A Joyous Disappointment.

(Written and illustrated by K. F. F. Kurth, 1900.)

It had long been the custom at Trinity College to have the spring recess a few weeks after Easter. Many of the students tried to induce the faculty—that highly respected, but extremely conservative body—to change the date of the recess so that it might include Easter, but in vain. Among those who worked most assiduously to effect this purpose was John Bruce, for he found an almost boyish delight in being home at Easter-time.

John was one of the most popular men in the class of '94; he was a good student and excelled in athletics; he had deep religious convictions and exerted a good influence wherever he went. As he sat alone in his room in Middle Jarvis, one Saturday afternoon, laboriously handling a large Greek lexicon, trying to prepare his Monday's lessons, he found himself much distracted. He had, indeed, spent two hours on forty lines of the "Medea," and was just looking up the last word when suddenly he realized that, for the entire time, his mind had been elsewhere; he scarcely remembered a single passage in the lesson. He threw down the books and continued the meditation which had unconsciously engaged his mind. His thoughts were in Chicago, his home. When he pictured to himself the pleasures of his friends who were home from Yale, Harvard and other colleges, whose company he was not permitted to enjoy, and especially, when he thought of Miss Mason, who was home from Smith College and in whom he felt a deep interest, he found no pleasure in life at Trinity. It was, indeed, an unpleasant thought that she would return to college the day before he would arrive home. John's religious nature turned his thoughts to the little church in which he had sung so many Easter carols. His church life at home was one of the things which he missed greatly at college. The Easter season was the most joyous of all seasons at the little church. John sat in his large chair, lamenting his sad lot. He looked around the room, everything seemed lifeless; he threw himself upon the window-seat and said to himself: "This is not Easter week nor was last Sunday Easter. No Easter joy has entered my heart." He looked out of the window and, for awhile, watched the fellows play ball. The day was superb, the sun was far in the west and the outline of the college was shadowed on the campus. Spring, with its Easter joys, seemed to be present, but it had not penetrated John's heart. He put on his cap and went down stairs; after wandering for awhile on the campus, he went out into the woods. As John was a great lover of nature, he thought that a ramble in the woods might bring him to a realizing sense of the presence of spring and drive from him the spell of gloom. The experiment was unsuccessful; he returned more gloomy than he went. He was tired and dusty, he went to his room, tore off his collar and necktie and threw himself upon the bed. In a few minutes he was sound asleep.

Suddenly James Lyons, a classmate of John’s, rushed into the room shouting, “O Jack, O Jack Bruce.” John awoke with a start and, before he would permit James to explain his mission, he said that he was just in the midst of an awful dream,—his mother was dead and they were preparing for the funeral. When John was sufficiently collected James told him that he was wanted at the telephone. John snatched up his cap and ran to the telephone room, while James crossed the hall and visited other classmates. John found the telephone-operator waiting for him; she informed him that he had been called by a man in Chicago. John, full of excitement, shouted, “Halloo, halloo” and, after a few moments, he heard faintly, but distinctly, the voice of Harry Thorpe, his sister’s fiancé. They exchanged words of greeting; then Harry said, “We were afraid that you were ill because you did not come home when I telegraphed you last Thursday.” John answered that he had received no telegram, adding that it must have miscarried. Then Harry Thorpe continued, “We thought it strange that you did not come. Your mother was—” and, just then, a hundred voices, each on a different pitch and all talking at once, seemed to cut in. “It's too bad that I am cut off,” John thought to himself, “for the message must be of great importance or they would not have gone to the expense of telephoning. They want me to come home, I wonder what for?” John rang and rang; at length the operator answered him and said that she would connect him with Chicago again. After a few minutes of waiting, in which John became very impatient and greatly excited, he heard a voice, more dimly than before and quite changed. He could not understand distinctly, but he thought that he heard the expression “your wife” several times. John, supposing that there must be some mistake, shouted, “Who are you?” several times, but got no answer. As he stood holding the receiver firmly to his ear, trying to make out the conversation and, at the same time, trying to think why he was wanted at home and what the remainder of the sentence begun “Your mother was—” could be, he heard a peculiar voice very distinctly: “Your mother was ill only two days; she died this afternoon.” He thought to himself “That is what Harry tried to say to me.” Then, as a flash, all the details of his awful dream came to him. He was now at the very highest pitch of excitement; he strained every nerve to hear more, but the receiver gave out nothing but a meaningless rumble. John was so full of grief he scarcely knew what he was doing. He ran out of the telephone room without hanging up the receiver. He did not even go to his room to pack a dress suit case nor stop at the President’s home to tell him that he had to go home, but ran down to the trolley car. He remembered now that he had only a few dollars with him. Fortunately, his roommate, Henry Drake, with three other students, just then stepped off the car. John, so confused and excited that he could scarcely make his wants known, asked them if they had any money. All four searched their pockets and found that together they had just a little over eighteen dollars; this they gave to him. He explained that his mother had died suddenly and that he was going home. As he was telling his roommate to pack his dress suit case and express it to him the car came, and John, stepping on, shouted “good bye” as the conductor rang the bell.

At the station he found that the last train for Springfield, with connections for Chicago, was just pulling out—he was too late. As the next day was Sunday and no trains leave Hartford on this day, he would be obliged to wait until Monday morning. This would never do; he must get to Chicago at once. The ticket agent was kind enough to tell him that there was one more train out of Hartford, leaving the Central New England station. John ran, full speed, to the little station and found that the train would leave in ten minutes. If this train was on time at Campbell Hall, he would make direct connections with the N. Y., O. & W. train from New York, and he would be in Chicago at ten o'clock, Sunday evening. John was very impatient; he walked up and down the station floor, looking at the clock each time he passed. He boarded the train five minutes before it pulled out, hoping it might start ahead of time.

Misfortune never comes single-handed. The train arrived at Campbell Hall twenty minutes late, and the train from New York had passed ten minutes before. It was now three o'clock in the morning. John was truly sick at heart. He asked the few men around the station when the next train would stop and found that there would be no train until four o'clock in the afternoon, and, although this was an express train, he would not arrive at Chicago until eight o'clock the next night. John asked everybody that he could find around the station, even the baggage-man with his truck, to make sure this information was correct. He went to the small hotel near the station and awoke the landlord; he engaged a room, and, although he was very tired, he could not sleep. He tossed about in bed and walked the floor. The strange voice with the awful message kept ringing in his ears; before his eyes he saw the vision of his dream, his mother dead and preparations being made for the funeral.

John got up very early, and, without waiting for breakfast, went to the station, hoping that, possibly, he might find an earlier train. He did, indeed, find that two trains would pass through Campbell Hall before four o'clock that afternoon, but both were limited and would not, under any circumstances, stop. He tried to get a train to New York, but found, also, that he could not do this. John was almost overcome with grief. The day, it seemed to him, presented all the pains and miseries of purgatory; it was the longest day that he had ever experienced.

A little before four o'clock, he saw a cloud of smoke over the track, in the distance; in a few minutes the train drew into the station. John jumped on before it stopped. His spirits were somewhat enlivened for now there would be no more delays. The day was long; it seemed as if the train was scarcely creeping; he took out his watch often, the hands seemed hardly to move. He tried to dispel the terrible message from his mind, but he heard the peculiar, ghostly voice repeating, "Your mother was sick only two days; she died this afternoon." He bought an illustrated novel from the train boy and tried to read, but every picture seemed to blur and form itself into the awful vision of his dream; the words of every sentence seemed to transform themselves into the message which he received over the telephone. He spent the day in great suspense, sorrow, pain and distress. The train, at last, pulled into Chicago. The porter’s announcement never seemed so welcome. He took the trolley car at once, and in an hour was at home.

John’s parents lived in a magnificent stone house on the Western Boulevard. When he was within a block of the house he found the street crowded with carriages. As he drew near the house, he found it lighted from attic to basement; he heard music and laughter. What could this mean? He stood still for a moment, wondering if his eyes and ears were deceiving him. He ran up to the door, and, without ringing, rushed in.

The new man-servant at the door, who had never seen John, thought him a ruffian, and attempted to put him out. Of a truth, John did look more like a tramp than a person fit to enter a festive assembly of men and women in evening dress, for he wore a shabby grey bicycle suit, sadly worn and torn; he had on a bleached-out blue shirt, and he was without collar or necktie. Both John and the man-servant spoke loudly; the attention of all the guests was attracted. Just as the servant was about to put him out by force, Harry Thorpe ran to him and took him in. John was dumbfounded by the splendor of the assembly, the flowers and the beautiful decorations. He could say nothing except “Where’s mother?” Harry tried to calm him, but he would not rest until he had seen his mother. Mrs. Bruce, with many friends, was in the drawing-room, and John, without a thought of his appearance, ran to her, and, embracing her, kissed her repeatedly. He was loosed from a burden which he could scarcely have endured longer. Instead of a house of mourning, he found a house of joy.

Harry then took him upstairs and explained how that, when he was talking to John, he was cut off before finishing, and, when he succeeded in getting the College again, he was told that John had gone home, saying that he had received a message that his mother had died. When John's roommate learned of the peculiar mistake, he hastened to the station, but found that the train for Springfield had left a half hour before. As he supposed that John was on this train, he telegraphed to Springfield and other points to intercept him, but the messages were returned with a notation that the person to whom they were addressed could not be found. This intelligence was telegraphed to Harry Thorpe. John was very impatient, and without permitting Harry to finish the explanation, asked: "But what is the rest of the sentence which you began 'Your mother was --,' why have you sent for me, what are all these people doing here?" Then Harry said that he tried to say, "Your mother was very much worried because you did not come home or answer the telegram. She thought that you must be ill." He then explained that he had been appointed private secretary to the United States minister at Corea, and that he must leave for Seoul in five days, that instead of his marriage to John's sister taking place in June, as was planned, the ceremony was performed five weeks earlier than was intended, that they were married that morning and were now having a reception.

When John's roommate learned why John was called home, and knowing that he took no clothing with him, he telegraphed this fact to Harry, who provided a dress suit. John dressed quickly and went down stairs, rejoicing not only because he had been so happily disappointed, but also because he got away from college twelve days before the spring vacation, and because he would now be able to spend a few pleasant hours with Miss Mason.
The Acolyte.

At vesper-time within a cathedral grand
I kindly watched a sweet-faced acolyte,
Who with a candle in his outstretched hand
Lighted the tapers on the altar white.

A week from then that pure young lad had died,
And as I looked out o'er the darksome night
His childlike form and visage, deified,
Appeared in heaven as God's acolyte.

And when at last each star-flame gently beamed,
He passed away from sight as first he came;
And then I fell asleep, and dreamed and dreamed,
And wished that I were only as free from blame.

THE trail across the quicksands was narrow and dangerous—even Gordon Scott admitted that—and he was the only one now in Nugget Gulch who knew that trail. Those sands were ever hungry; Joe Cole once drove his pony off the trail and he sank in five minutes. There used to be two who knew the trail, Gordon and his brother, Stuart. Stuart was an active, kind-hearted sort of a chap—great favorite with the softer side of Nugget Gulch. Gordon often said he would be sorry for it some day. Stuart cared especially for Sophie Morris, whose father, Bill Morris—"Guido Bill," as the Gulch put it—kept a tobacco shop at the "Corners." Maro, the Navajo, also liked Sophie, and Stuart knew it.

Well, one day Stuart and Gordon were smoking and playing at the "Corners," when in comes Denny Cox, who furnished things to talk about for the Gulch. "Well," said Denny, "it's all fixed." He waited till every one was attentive, and then added, "I mean about Soph and Maro—goin' to be married to-morrow."

Stuart did not move a muscle. "That so?" ventured Gordon; but all were waiting for a word from Stuart. He rose deliberately and said to Denny:

"How d' you know?"

"So they told me at Morris's," Denny said.

Stuart's hand went to his hip pocket and he strode out of the room. Gordon laid his newly-dealt hand on the table and followed his brother.

"Me an' Stuart's goin' up to the Divide to-night," was all he offered for an excuse.

That night about eleven, two figures on ponies could have been seen silhouetted against the sky, over the Divide, and even then one figure was saying to the other, "Never mind, Stuart, may be Denny was bluffing you."

Just as these two figures disappeared over the Divide every one at Morris's was startled by hearing hot words, then a woman's scream, then a revolver shot. Guido Bill rushed upstairs to find Sophie's door locked. The pushing crowd from below soon broke it in, and disclosed Sophie dying on the floor and the room full of powder smoke. The window was open and the curtains were torn. It was only a small drop to the ground. Guido Bill rushed to the window and emptied his whole chamber into the darkness, then he turned and counted the men present—Maro, Gordon and Stuart absent. Maro was going to marry Sophie, Stuart wanted to. Gordon had said something about going to the Divide. Where was Stuart?

About midnight Guido Bill mounted his pony, with a fixed look, and took up the trail for the Divide. He rode silently, looking every now and then at the butt of a brand
On a Summer Sea.

The light winds blow, soft and low,
Over the waters of the western sea;
The sea gulls fly, as our ship sails by,
Over the waves to the land on our lee.

Blow high, blow low, ye breezes blow,
And waft your sweetness o'er the sea,
With eastern balms and western gales
To bear us on our journey free.

A Love Tale.

I.
I am going to start off frankly
And say I'm dead in love
With a being, Oh! so pure and white,
In whose inward soul there beams a light
That burns the bad and leaves the right,
Like angels up above.

II.
Each winter night we sit up late
Before a blazing fire,
And as I press her lips to mine
Her face lights up, almost sublime,
Which makes my heart go "express time,"
And sends my pulses higher.

III.
Under her influence I do dream
Of great things on this orbit;
Of conquering nations by my might,
Subduing wrong, excelling right,
Of whipping in a great prize fight
Fitzsimmons or J. Corbett.

IV.
And when circumstances force me
To leave her for awhile,
I feel so worn, so cross, so blue,
I swear, I cuss, in fact I do
Once in awhile take a small chew
To make the time beguile.

V.
But when I'm back with her again,
And all my thoughts confide,
I press her lips to mine once more;
Inhale the love she has in store
With the same charms as 'twas before
I had to leave her side.

VI.
Perhaps you'd like to know her name—
You can not guess, I bet.
She is the thing that costs so much,
That people say in good plain Dutch
There's poison in her very touch—
A paper cigarette.

—James W. Bradin, Jr.
MR. ELSMERE M. HURD,
Literary Editor of the 1930 Ivy.

Dear Sir: I can not fully express to you the pleasure I experienced upon the receipt of your letter inviting me to contribute to your Annual, nor the sense of mortification by which I am assailed in being compelled to decline your offer. I am a man of business and have been such since I graduated from college nearly thirty years ago. Though, in truth, I possessed little literary ability when in college, I have to admit that I have developed none since my contact with the world. Not wishing, however, to disappoint you altogether, I thought of this as a compromise—that I would write you this letter, which, if you felt warranted to do so, you could publish as a rather poor reminiscence of my class. When business would permit, I have endeavored to ascertain all about my classmates since their graduation—a sort of hobby with me—and I have succeeded, almost without fail, in tracing their individual careers. I beg of you to pardon my excessive use of the personal pronoun, but it is difficult to write such memories without the use of the obtrusive “I.” I shall promise not to use it more than twenty-four times in one sentence.

First, let us go back to old times. Quite vivid is the scene of our class coming out of chapel for the first time. What better introduction could be given thirty men who never perhaps saw each other before? Our first push-rush, and, if my memory is straight, our second push-rush, were both captained by a man named Schwartz. He was a big, strong fellow, a candidate for the foot ball team; black hair, well put together, and a face full of strength; a face, as I remember it, like Washington's—lcouldn't-tell-a-lie face. We had some difficulty in getting men out to our first push-rush, but with only sixteen men we gave '99 quite a pleasant little time. Well, matters went along in our Freshman year as I suppose they do now. We were called "nought," and we tried to be "naught." Sometimes, of course, we became "naughty," as when Sherwood—a little short, dumpy fellow, with tow head and full of fun—exhibited a sign containing our numerals at a customary function of the college life. I think most of our Freshman energy was put in the banquet to '98, which was held out at the "Elm Tree Inn." The banquet was not greatly interfered with by '99, who were indubitably brave until they reached the Inn, where "discretion seemed the better part of valor."

Our Sophomore year ran along smoothly and without serious loss to the class, except the absence of two or three good fellows. The only ones I can think of now are Brooks, Baldwin and Wood. We made the rush a draw with '01, and beat them in the underclass athletics. Things went on pretty slowly in our Sophomore life until the spring, when about twelve of us formed a club called B. U., organized on the birthday of the saint who was ever afterward our patron. I wonder if any old B. U. man will see this and remember how—no; I better not tell you our secrets. Well, after it was formed, the life around college was not slow. Another pleasant part in our life as Sophomores was a dining club called S. D. C. Does this still exist? I shall try to recall the names of the members. There were Prince, Schwartz, Glazebrook, whom we called Whitey because of his hair, Hill, Haight, who took an interest in music boxes, Fuller, Fox, Bradin, Brown, Jewett, McIvaine and Hornor, whose nickname was “Nig,” because he came from the South. In fact, all southerners were called niggers.

But I must hurry along. Jewett, Fuller, Sherwood, Arundel and perhaps others were missing in our Junior year, which slipped away like all other Junior years. There were no striking events in our class history during that period.

Our Senior year was smooth and sorrowful towards the end. We lost no more men and graduated a class of twenty-three. Our class-day exercises were somewhat different from other classes, in that we had no foot ball men in the class, and so substituted the presentation of an American flag to our Alma Mater, with a patriotic speech by Prof. McCook.

What then became of all your classmates after graduation and what is each one doing now? you ask. I shall tell you, although it would be too laborious to go through the catalogue in detail, and I fear your readers would not be interested. Let me say that I took up this work of following my old classmates about five years after graduation, and, living in New York, I had no difficulty in gathering data concerning those men who lived in the vicinity. The men who were more closely connected with me in my college life I often see, and further hear from them through correspondence. The other men it is harder to lay the finger upon; but watch, if you please, how Providence seemed to guide me.

Only the other day, to give you late news first, I met Glazebrook, looking almost the same as during college days, excepting a few more lines in his face. He became famous about five years after leaving college on the professional “diamond.” And I remember well reading the head lines of a Sunday paper which called him the man with a $10,000 arm. He has a nice little sum put away now. Lives in Elizabeth with his wife and children and raises dogs for his own pleasure. He told me one day that he was surprised to find how easy it was for a college graduate to make three dollars a week. I think he smiled as he said it. There was a convention of the Holy Catholic Church—we used to call it the Protestant Episcopal—in New York not long ago. I went to it for no other reason than to see if I could find any old classmates there. Well, it was quite a reunion. Some of them were Bishops, others prominent in church work. Schwartz had occupied the See of Albany for some four or five years. Kurth was Missionary Bishop of China, and Tracy, Brines, Arnott and Simonds were holding prominent positions in the church work at their respective homes. There you see was quite a bunch of old friends. Three or four years before this I had a like opportunity, for there was held a meeting of the Bar Association in New York. The 1900 delegation of lawyers showed up as well as the 1900 delegation of ministers. I went to this convention both to meet these fellows and, further, because I was a member of the Bar Association myself. When I entered the convention, I met at the door a small man with a white beard and piercing eyes, whom for a second I hardly recognized as my old friend Sherwood. He is now judge. In comparison with him was a tall, dark-haired fellow with a gray moustache, whom, from the shape of his legs, I had no trouble in remembering—it was Judge Titus, of Buffalo. Among the other lawyers were Clement, Case Bryant, Prince, Fuller and Smart. On my way to Hartford the other day, I glanced up at the conductor and recalled the face of my old roommate, Bradin. He had risen in the railroad business from train boy to conductor. He was married and had five or six children. I think he won the class cup for the man who was blessed with the first child. I had quite a chat with him about old times and he gave me no little information. From him I learned that Fox was keeping a hotel down in Bradford; Haight was working in the Klondike region, having patented a solar engine of some merit; Hall and Burt and Coons were architects; that Tomlinson was editor of a Hartford daily; Taylor was a distinguished physician in the same city, and that Richmond was still endowing College Walks. Bradin seems to have kept up with the class better than myself. Now hear what Providence did. I strolled in the club about five years ago, and, looking around the reading room, stumbled against a New Orleans paper. Thoughts came to me of an old classmate. I turned to the first page and read the head lines of a terrific lynching scrape in the Crescent City. My eye following the column came unexpectedly upon what I sought. Hornor had been mixed up in some politics and was lynched by a band of truculent negro politicians. He left a wife and seven children.

These are the facts that I have accumulated about my class up to the present time. My heart goes out to them with the wish for a long and prosperous life, full of peace and happiness, and only a small share of those griefs which come to all men as they grow older. Four years of affectionate intercourse can only be made more strong by the years that have separated us. May every 1900 man be ever true to our old motto, which through all the friction of the world has held me in good stead—always ready. Ready to oppose the bad and ready to support the good.

Thanking you again for your invitation, and, if you publish this, for your indulgence to an old man, and trusting that your Ivy may be a success, with God's blessing invoked for dear old Trinity, I remain

Very sincerely yours,
