Hartford Tires

They have a name and fame everywhere as being the most successful and strictly high grade equipment, and as possessing a quality that is standard the country over.

Others may be cheaper in first costs, but the true worth and the durability of Hartford Tires demonstrates their real economy in the long run.

They are more resilient, wear longer, and require less care than any other tire made.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

This illustration shows the principal building of Trinity College, 653 feet long, in the English Secular Gothic style. At right angles with it, on the south, are the observatory, the new Hall of Natural History, and the Jarvis Laboratories for Chemistry and for Physics. To the north of it are the Gymnasium, houses of the President and Professors, and Chapter Houses of the Fraternities.

Below the College Campus to the east, and within three minutes' walk, is the spacious Athletic Field.

In beauty of situation, healthful conditions of life, and equipment for its special work, the College is not surpassed.

The college has distinct courses in Arts, in Science, in Letters and Science, and in Letters.

The Faculty includes eleven professors, eleven instructors, and five lecturers.

Among the Elective studies within the respective courses, there is scarcely a single important subject for which adequate provision is not made.

Properly qualified candidates not desiring to pursue the whole studies of any course are allowed as Special Students to pursue certain subjects, receiving certificates of satisfactory work.

The Library contains 40,000 volumes. Generous contributions of the Alumni are making possible a rapid addition to its resources.

A new Reference Reading Room lighted at night by electricity is open not only during the day, but also five evenings of the week.

The Jarvis Chemical and Physical Laboratories have every equipment for the most advanced work.

The new Hall of Natural History contains Biological Laboratories provided with the most modern appliances.

There are about fifty scholarships for the aid of necessitous students. The three Holland Scholarships, yielding each $600 per annum, are awarded to the three best students in the three lower classes respectively. The Russell Graduate Fellowship of $400 is awarded biennially in the interest of higher graduate study. Prizes to the amount of $500 are also awarded to undergraduates for success in the work of the various departments.

Two examinations for admission are held at the College in each year, the first in the week preceding the Annual Commencement, viz.: June 21-23, and the second in September, immediately before the beginning of the Christmas Term, September 17-20.

For Catalogues, Examination Papers, or information, apply to the President or to the Secretary of the Faculty.

THE IVY
As a little sprig of "Ivy,"
Planted by the College wall,
Ever reaches out its tendrils,
Till, at length, it covers all;
So thy spirit, Alma Mater,
Planted once within our hearts,
With its roots of old traditions,
Which the years gone by impart,
Reaches to our souls its creepers,
Tendrils formed of love for thee
Binding us to thee forever—
Loved and loving Trinity.

N days gone by, when Shakespeare repeated his own lines, it was the duty of a muse or herald to appear at the beginning of a performance and explain to the audience the drama which was to be given. So this is not an editorial, in the usual sense, but merely a few words of greeting and explanation which the compilers of the book take this chance of expressing. Greeting to you who planted the Ivy; to you, our College mates, who with us have watched it grow, and to you, yet to come, for whom its future leaves shall spring.

Our aims are to show the public something of our inner College life; to remind the Alumni of things past and to show them that the Trinity spirit and love for our Alma Mater, which bind them to us is steadily growing with the years; and, lastly, to give the undergraduates a record of the College year upon which they can rely and to which they can turn for reference.

We express our sincerest thanks to those whose literary or artistic ability has aided us in the production of this annual.
Trinity College,

Hartford, Conn.

This college was chartered by the State of Connecticut in 1823. Its first class was graduated in 1827. It was founded by Episcopalians under the leadership of the Right Rev. Thomas Church Brownell, and has been fostered especially by members of that communion, but it is governed by a self-perpetuating Board of Trustees not under ecclesiastical control. While attached to the interests of its church, it is not sectarian. It has included among its students men of every faith. It is a generously equipped secular institution, religious in spirit and motives, but not ecclesiastical. It gives its advantages to all properly qualified candidates, irrespective of religious affiliations.

The corps of instruction consists of twelve professors, five lecturers, eight instructors and a librarian.

Courses of Instruction

The college offers four courses of instruction, viz.:

I. A Course in Arts.

II. A Course in Letters and Science.

III. A Course in Science.

IV. A Course in Letters.

The courses extend over four years. Students completing the course in Arts receive the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Students completing the Course in Letters and Science or the Course in Science receive the degree of Bachelor of Science, and those completing the Course in Letters receive the degree of Bachelor of Letters.

Students who do not propose to pursue all the studies of any of the regular courses may be permitted, under the name of special students, to attend any class in such studies as, upon examination, they are found qualified to pursue. Upon honorable dismissal, they are entitled to a certificate from the President, stating the studies which they have pursued. In certain departments the College offers also instruction for graduate students. The departments of instruction in the College number twenty-four, including eighty-two elective and voluntary courses.

The Principle of Instruction

The number of the teaching force, large relatively to the number of those taught, admits of a close relation between instructors and students. Each student is held accountable for his work every day, and receives personal encouragement and guidance in a degree impossible where the number of the taught is greater. Practical research and laboratory methods are applied wherever possible.

The Library

The College Library, numbering 43,000 volumes, is under the superintendence of a professional librarian, who guides the students in the use of books. They have also at their command the Watkinson Reference Library of 50,000 volumes, the Library of the Connecticut Historical Society, and the Hartford Public Library, with its well-stocked reading rooms.
Laboratories and Observatory

The Jarvis Physical Laboratory contains in addition to the lecture and apparatus rooms, a large laboratory for work in the elementary courses, a reference library and several smaller laboratories adapted and devoted to advanced work of a special character. The laboratory has a very complete equipment for work in all the branches of Physics. Special attention has been given to making the facilities for work in electricity as complete as possible. The department is provided with standard apparatus for electrical measurements, and has a workshop, steam engine and direct current and polyphase alternating current generators for its special use.

The Jarvis Chemical Laboratory is well equipped for work in general experimental and organic chemistry, in qualitative and quantitative analysis, and in assaying and gas analysis. The main laboratory has desk space for thirty students working at one time. This room is devoted to work in general experimental chemistry and qualitative analysis. For work in quantitative analysis and organic chemistry separate laboratories are provided and properly equipped. A room set apart for assaying is fitted up with suitable furnaces and other necessary material.

The new Hall of Natural History contains biological, botanical, geological and mineralogical laboratories provided with every modern equipment.

The Observatory contains a six and a half inch refractor, a two and a half inch transit, a standard clock, a chronograph, a smaller refractor, a portable transit, a sextant, and conveniences for the simpler work in astronomical photography.

Gymnasium and Athletic Field

A gymnasium is supplied with the best apparatus, in the use of which the students are trained by a special instructor. An Athletic Field on the College grounds is to be extended and perfected at an expense of $10,000, contributed by friends and alumni of the College.

Fellowships, Scholarships and Prizes

The Russell Fellowship, yielding about $400, is awarded biennially to a member of the graduating class, of superior ability, who engages to pursue an approved course of graduate study at Trinity College or at some foreign university. The Holland Scholarships, each having an annual value of $600, are awarded to the students attaining the highest rank in the Junior, Sophomore and Freshman classes respectively. Prizes of the aggregate value of $490 are awarded in the several departments.

Expenses

The amount of the Treasurer’s bills each year varies from $177.50 to $242.50. Board can be obtained at $3.50 a week and upwards, making the cost of board for thirty-seven weeks at the lowest rate $129.50. The amount of the Treasurer’s bills can be reduced to holders of beneficiary scholarships of which there are more than fifty.

Situation

The buildings of the college are situated on a site commanding beautiful views in the southern part of Hartford, itself one of the most beautiful cities of New England. The largest of the buildings, more than 600 feet in length, intended to form the west side of a great quadrangle, is of stone in the English secular gothic style, and is one of the most notable collegiate buildings of the country. The Jarvis Laboratories, the Hall of Natural History and the Gymnasium, are tasteful and commodious structures of brick. Six of the college fraternities have special chapter houses.

'Neath the Elms

'Neath the elms of our old Trinity,
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity,
No more shall we meet,
Our classmates to greet,
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity.

CHORUS.
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity,
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity,
Oh, it's seldom we'll meet in the moonlight so sweet,
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity.

On the hills of our old Trinity,
In the halls of our old Trinity,
There is right merry cheer.
There are friends true and dear,
In the halls of our old Trinity.

College days are from care and sorrow free,
And oft will we seek in memory
The days that are past,
Far too joyous to last,
'Neath the elms of our old Trinity.

Then we'll sing to our old Trinity,
To our dear old Alma Mater, Trinity,
We're together to-day,
And to-morrow away,
Far away from our old Trinity.

History

O UR years looked at in prospect seem a long period; in retrospect, an amazingly short time. Members of 1902 realize only too well that they are soon to become members of the body of the alumni. New scenes, new problems, new associations will take the place of the many things which have interested us during our college days.

The Seniors feel that theirs has been an honorable record. We have done our best to uphold the good name of Trinity, whether in a scholastic, athletic or social way. We have endeavored to make the term, "Trinity man," synonymous with gentleman.

As Freshmen our exuberant spirits often got the better of us, but we were sorry to have caused the suspension of the entire Sophomore class until we realized that the "disgrace" so slightly affected that august body, that they had the mistaken idea that they were enjoying a six weeks' vacation. Thus good may come out of evil.

The following year we took in hand the underclass discipline, forgetting in the customary way our own needs in that direction: Pipes took the place of cigarettes, and we fully understood how important a part of Trinity College we were.

The growth of the feeling of dignity and importance was not so great when we became Juniors as it had been the previous year. This was the time that we really used our brains by the study of ethics and the compilation of the IVY.

Now we are Seniors! We have reached the goal long sought for! Take our word for it, juniors, sophomores, and freshmen, this sublime state which you aspire to is not altogether ideal; it is too near the end of college life.

During our stay at Trinity many changes have taken place. The Natural History building has been erected, and the library enlarged and made efficient under the present able management. Two fraternities have recently acquired handsome new homes which add greatly to the attractiveness of the college colony. There seems to be no reason why there should not be in a few years a "Double Trinity."

It is with great regret that we chronicle the fact that with the departure of 1902, one of Trinity's best instructors also leaves, Dr. William Lispenard Robb, a man for whom we have the greatest respect and affection. We wish Professor Robb the success in his new field which the several members of the class hope for in their new undertakings.

History of Class of 1903

"The more we live, more brief appear our life's succeeding stages," says Campbell in his "River of Life," and we are in a position to feel, perhaps for the first time, the impressive truth of his words. Each year of the college course possesses distinct characteristics more or less pleasing in their nature.

In fact some of them are felt at times to be agreeable inversely as their distance from the point of application. For instance, when a pitcher of ice water is poured down the inverted trouser leg of one who cannot see why he should not smoke a pipe on the walk. But twelve months brings a change, and next year it is the victim who holds the pitcher, and he is thus enabled to view his surroundings from a more elevated standpoint.

So it is all through the sophomore year; having learned to obey, the second year men are qualified to exercise control, and they enjoy a sphere of distinct usefulness in the college world. How much shorter seem the terms now! Midyear's past, baseball here, and before he has fully awakened to the fact the man of two college winters finds himself permitted to don the dignified mien of an upper classman.

He leaves college in June to be gone three months. During this time he comes to a more complete understanding of his position in college, and the universe in general; a very distinct change has unconsciously been wrought within him which is noticeable in the manner of taking his seat in chapel for the first time after his return.

I think every graduate will concede his junior year to have been the fullest and most completely satisfactory of the four that constituted the joyous period of his college existence. To us who are just completing our third year it is, of course, impossible to describe the feelings of those in the senior class, but it is easy to appreciate their emotions as they see the days go quickly by, and the time of their departure drawing near.

We men of Naughty-Three shall have the mutual pleasure of association for yet another year, though it is the shortest of them all, and feel open to congratulation on this fact above all else. At the end of that time will come the consummation of our youth, and we may say in the words of Browning,

"Thence shall I pass, approved
A man, for aye removed,
From the developed brute; a god though in the germ."

The critical point in our history as a class has long since been safely passed. We are just in the prime of life, so to speak, and as we stop for a few moments of retrospective contemplation, a quiet glow of satisfaction pervades our being. The train of memory carries us swiftly backward. Events of the months just past shine brightly, adding their lustre to the achievements of our earlier days, until we see as clearly as if it happened yesterday our first great struggle. It was that same contest and final victory in maintaining our numerals on the gymnasium roof, at risk of life and limb for two full hours that taught us the great truth; in union their is strength. How well that lesson was learned our subsequent history illustrates. The tale of Naughty-Three's freshman banquet will make the hearts of new men beat faster for years to come. Trinity's track team found an elixir of life in the men who won for us the underclass meet, and from our ranks are chosen the corner stones of other athletic structures.

The success of the Junior Promenade exemplifies the social attainments of Nineteen Hundred and Three, and her strong representation on the musical and literary organizations bear witness to the earnest fulfillment of the sentiment expressed in her motto, "non instremil laboramus."

History

Each year of our college course some poor fellow — some one who is looked upon as a “mark” — is asked to write a “history” of the class. It is generally understood that for the first two years this so-called “history” will consist of as large a mass of gaseous, boasting material as will fill one page of “The Ivy,” interspersed with two or three facts, to give some reason for calling the composition “history.” In other words, the man who has the misfortune to become a class “historian” is, in reality, expected to be class trumpeter and the man of the two lower classes who blows his trumpet the louder is looked upon by all as the better “historian.”

Last year we allowed a mass of concentrated nonsense, mingled with conceit, such as that referred to above, to go to print. We were freshmen then, and knew no better; now we are sophomores, and should be above such things. What honor is there in recording how we defeated freshmen; or in blowing our own trumpet? None whatever; and, therefore, we ask to be allowed to give ourselves up to a few reflections.

As we look into the mirror which is before us — we mean the freshman class — we see what manner of men we were last year, and wonder how we could have been so fresh, without knowing it. We wonder how we could have thought so much of ourselves with so little apparent reason. We are surprised that it did not occur to us till this year — as it probably will not to the present freshman class until next year — that we were referred to in the psalm where it says, “All ye green things of the earth,” but somehow we never thought of it until we looked into our mirror. Truly then we saw, “thro’ a glass darkly,” but now “face to face.” All our faults are brought before us, and we see ourselves as others saw us when we were freshmen.

Now we are sophomores. What a difference there is in us! Ah, yes, but is it really in us? Is it not rather in the name by which we are known? Have we not turned away from our mirror and straightway forgotten what manner of men we were, and probably are, except for the greenness? We are just as fresh, or even fresher, but we are not called so now. We are, if possible, more concealed than we were last year, but it is not noticed half so much. And in many other ways we are just as we were last year. Yet the mere fact that we are sophomores changes us completely in the eyes of the college, and greater respect is given to us, whether we have improved since our first year or not.

Yet we must not despair. We have learned some things. We can get along with much less study now than we could last year. Some of us have made rapid progress in the art of “fussing,” while others have formed a strong friendship with our good old friend Bacchus. Nearly all have found out that a college student is never expected to pay his bills, and, fearing lest some of their creditors should have heart trouble, rigidly kept themselves from all such follies. Oh, yes! We have advanced!

As we reflect on these things, the fresh spring air blows in upon us, and we think how fast the time is approaching when we shall be sophomores no longer. Yet whatever we may be called for the time, we are always of the class of 1904, and nothing except failure to do our duty, can make us anything else. Then we should be unworthy of the class, and God forbid that such should be the case. Let us rather, in the true spirit of 1904, do our duty and strive that it may be said of each one of us when we have completed our course,

“He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.”

Hi.rtory

T HIS history business is rather unpleasant, don't you think? For even when you've a lot you can boast of, as in the present instance, it isn't very nice work. Still it's got to be done, however reverse we are to blowing, so here goes.

Nineteen hundred and five is a remarkable class, as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, college without end. It is a large class, in response to the "Double Trinity" movement, the beginning, we hope, of a steady growth. Nevertheless, it is not size alone, but spirit, which tells. Our pious, yet manly and athletic attitude was shown at the first. For our first act as a class was attendance on divine service; our second was participation in an athletic game, akin to the original football, but somewhat rough — on us. The next afternoon we posted five challenges for a push-rush, despite the somewhat unusual removal and attempted secretion of the bulletin board. Rather to our disappointment, only one of these was accepted. Although we won two of the three rushes, the judges wisely gave the decision to our opponents, to prevent a "head" from intemperance in victory. It had the desired effect of warding off conceit. After the rush we marched and sang awhile, and later responded to the song "Give us a drink, bartender."

A class is judged largely by athletic standards, and this is our record. We won the Underwood Cup by a large score, although more competition would have been desirable. Three of us played on the football team, one winning his "T." Our class team tied the Sophomores. Two of our men have played on the basketball team. We lost, of course, to the other classes, but ranked second in points scored. We won three out of five outside games, defeating Wesleyan freshmen once. At present writing, baseball and track history is making, not made; but 1905, "Ad Omnia Paratus" will do its best.

In brief our musical history is: three each on the glee, mandolin and banjo clubs, one in the quartet, a piano soloist, and the substitute organist.

Socially we hope we are doing well. We are in modest evidence at all the functions. We even gave a dinner, which we hope the juniors enjoyed as much as we did.

Lastly, but of no small importance, there are some fine scholars, among us, who will prove of great credit to college and class.

We thank you for your attention, and will endeavor to offer a much longer and proportionately more creditable list of doings each succeeding year of our course.

Gentlemen, let us drink to "Trinitas et MCMV: Floreat!"

C. J. H.

JARVIS HALL  SEABURY HALL  BROWNELL HALL
TRINITY COLLEGE ABOUT 1850
THF, HALL OF NATURAL HISTORY
The Year

WELL, we are about through another college year. In many ways the year has been exactly like the others that we have spent here, and yet things have seemed a little different, too. Those that came here as Freshmen are now almost Sophomores, and life begins to center more in a class pipe than in a strong lock on the door. The Sophomores are nearly Juniors, and are calculating how their dignity had best be displayed. The Juniors will be Seniors soon, and will proceed to put on the corrugated brow that betokens the wisdom of four years. As for the Seniors, well, they will have to begin to work, in the real sense of the word. But this is not a condensed class history, so we must pass on.

The year began with the usual underclass demonstrations, in which the two classes came off with honors about even. Then the football team began to attract attention. The team last year was not what it was the year before, for some of our best men were gone, but in spite of that we did pretty well, and in the most important game of the year we held our opponents down to a reasonable score. In other games the team played well, and if it did not win, at least it did much toward getting the material into shape that will make a winning team in the coming season.
As soon as the winter set in the basketball team began its work, the first game we played showed, in the language of the press, “the weak points in the team.” But these weak points were soon remedied, and the team got down to business. In the league games, we did not show up so well as in some of the others, but this was due to the fact that the league games came in the first part of the season. Towards the end of the winter we played Wesleyan, and added another victory to the string.

“Trinity Week,” with its teas, receptions, and dances, was a season of great enjoyment, and during that time the college was able to extend its hospitality to a large number of friends. The festivities of the week closed with the Junior “Prom,” which was highly successful. Alumni Hall was beautifully decorated on the evening which marked the debut of 1903 as upperclass-men.

In order to make the change from society to athletics seem less abrupt, perhaps it would be well to make some mention of an event which partook of the nature of both—the St. Patrick’s Day celebration. The campus was wet and muddy, and the rain fell at intervals, but the struggle was unhindered by the elements, and was only ended when the Juniors had to leave the field of carnage in order to be present at the lecture in Ethics on “Our Duty to Our Fellow Men.”

The In-door Meet was as interesting as usual this year, and although no records were broken, the work done in many of the events was of the “star” variety. During the evening the announcement was made of the gift of a silver athletic trophy by Professor J. J. McCook, to be awarded yearly to the Trinity athlete making the best record at any intercollegiate meet. The results of the in-door Meet, like those of last year, were in favor of 1902. This is the second year that the gymnasium cup has been won by the class of 1902.

The Parallel Bars Cup was won by E. S. Merriam, 1902, and the McCracken Cup went to C. H. Hill, 1902.

At the present writing, the baseball team has begun a most promising season. We are about even so far on victories and defeats, but that will be changed later when the team gets into regular form.

And so another year is over. It seems hard to realize that we are that much nearer the end of our college life. But the new faces on the walk and the regular recurrence of the gas bills remind us of the flight of time. For some there are only a few weeks left. For others the time is longer. It won’t be long now before we will all have gone, and “others will fill our places.” Some are anxious for that time to come—perhaps all are,—but when it does come, and we are numbered among the Alumni, there will often be times when we will wish we were back again in that room in Northam or Jarvis or Seabury, and could begin it all over again from the night when we first heard, “All out, Freshmen!”

The Horn of Wisdom

The Sultan was young and proud and fair
But his heart was heavy with despair,

For the whole earth seemed to him to be
Curled by man's inhumanity.

"There is no right, there is no wrong;
The fierce, the cowards, the weak, the strong.

Make up the tribes of men," he said;
"The circle which binds the royal head,

"My father won by craft and force,
His throne was built on his brother's corse.

"The lightning falls on the bad and the good,
But the just man bears the heaviest load.

"Pity and kindness, simple truth,
Love and mercy, and gentle ruth,

"These are trampled in the dust
Everywhere by greed and lust.

"The beast of prey is the noblest brute
And strength is the noblest attribute;

"Man is merely the cunningest beast,
And the liar sits highest at the feast.

"Our pleasures all are rooted in death,
And temperance is but saving breath

"Which spent more quickly were our gain,
Since the shorter our days the less our pain.

"This earth was framed by an evil god
With a heart of hate in a careless mood;

"And what can Allah's heaven give
When on Allah's earth 'tis hell to live?"

* * * * * * * * *

Thus was the young man's spirit wrought
Beneath the chilling load of thought:
In his haunted eye and haggard stare
Men read the story of despair.

All the pride of life and the lust of the eye
And the charm that springs from minstrelsy,

All beauty and music and woman's kiss
And the breath of Spring were powerless

To fill his heart with the wholesome thought
And the shallow joys that come unbought

To those, who, blest with thoughtlessness,
Escape the thinker's soul-distress.

To the Sultan thus in sombre mood
'£here came from the desert's solitude,
An old man, grey, and thin, and worn,
In his hand he bore a brazen horn.

With eye serene and unbent head
"Listen and learn, O, King," he said,

"The guardians of the sacred roll
Have known the sickness of thy soul.

The sadness which the wise man feels
Only a higher wisdom heals,

And, therefore, I have come to thee,
To heal thee of thy malady.

For thee, O King, by us was wrought
The magic horn which I have brought;

We wrought it with fasting and with prayer
In the holy place with pious care,

And we sang as we wrought in unison
The mystic words that are known to none,

But the three who read the sacred book
On which no other men may look.

The dancing atoms knew the word,
Anew their rhythmical pulse was stirred,

And when God's true name thrice was said,
It entered the walls of the thing we made.
Thus who so listens through this horn,
To his sense the soul of things is born,
He hears the deeper harmony
Which closes in all things that be.
The mighty stream he comes to know
Of the river of life, upon whose flow
The false, the true, the bad, the good
Are foam-borne bubbles of the flood.”
The Sultan put the horn to his ear.
And bent his head as if to hear.
Then the inner music of life he heard,
The mystic murmur his being stirred.
Both the song of joy and the sigh of distress
Held the note of cosmic hopelessness.
For love and hope and joy all merge
Their music in creation’s dirge.
The note of death was over all
The other notes that rise and fall,
And sounds unchanging, triumphing,
The dominant voice of Nature’s King.
The Sultan said, “Take back this thing,
For bitter comfort does it bring;
The face of the world is scarred with a curse
But the hideous heart of the world is worse.
Best is the careless fleeting glance,
For Paradise was ignorance,
And wisdom teaches that central law
Is changeless, soulless; that all things draw
To cold oblivion where no bow
Of promise bends o’er a world of snow:
Only the cold auroral light
Beneath whose rosy rays grows bright,
A waste unvisited by the sun,
When the farcical dance of life is done.”
And from that day his soul in gloom
Sank deeper neath the sense of doom.

When You Are Here

When you are here,
Though dark clouds rise
I know the sky will clear
When you are here.
Upon my face there is no care or pain,
That at your kiss won't turn to joy again,
When you are here.

When you're away,
Though skies are clear
I fear a somber day,
When you're away.
Though joys are many and misfortunes few.
Yet all is tinged with loneliness for you.
When you're away.

In November.

Blow high, blow low, ye winds that go,
And kiss my fair Ruth's cheek,
For now we're off —
Our game is golf —
With putter, brassey, and cleek.

On bended knee, I build her tee,
And when she drives I gaze.
Lost is the ball,
My heart, my all.
When Ruth, my fair Ruth plays

Still on we go — the sun is low.
I've lost holes left and right.
I'll count these few,
Since Ruth's mine, too.
Our hazards are cleared to-night.

P.
The Two Blind Pools

JACK ASHLEY was one of those unfortunate young men, who have never been called on to exert themselves except at football. He went through college with credit because it was easy for him to learn, and it was about as easy to be regular in attendance as to be irregular. He had few wishes ungratified; in fact, he hardly took the trouble to formulate wishes about anything. He was good looking, good natured, and in good health, and seemed to possess all qualities in happy balance and none in excess. He knew a little about music, a little about art, a little about science, and was equally interested, or uninterested, in everything. His guardian—all his near relatives were dead—allowed him a generous income, and when he came of age handed over to him $500,000, in gilt-edged bonds and stocks, and, the trust having been closed, thought no more about him. Ashley went to Europe for a year, and when he came back he found all his classmates and friends actively engaged in business. There seemed to be nothing for him to do. From dissipation he shrank with the instinct of a healthy young fellow. He liked all women in a general way, and, though several young ones had intimated pretty plainly that he might like them in a particular way if he wished to, he kept up quite easily a brotherly relation to all of them. It did not seem worth while to specialize in a subject, all parts of which were about equally interesting.

Having nothing to do, and living in New York with a sufficient income and no expensive tastes or hobbies, he naturally took to speculation. As long as he knew nothing about business he lost little, for whether he bought or sold blindly his chance was even. He did not venture much, and his losses and gains were about balanced, and the broker's commissions, attached impartially to both, amounted only to a few thousand dollars. This did not seem very interesting, and soon after New Year he went into a "blind pool" with old Lamb, of Lamb, Skinner & Co., to buy all the stock of the "Tin Plate and Spanish Castle R. R. Co." In a "blind pool" a number of men contribute money, and one does the "operating." In the end, when the realizing or "sugaring off" takes place, this operator divides the profits—or losses—in proportion to the amounts originally contributed. Ashley would have told you that old Lamb was one of the shrewdest and most successful speculators in the world. Everybody knew that. But he would not have told you that T. P. and S. C. shares were absolutely valueless, for he did not know that; nor that old Lamb already owned nearly all of them, for only two people knew that; nor that old Lamb owned in addition the greater part of the bonded indebtedness of the road, for only one person knew that; nor that this astute person was preparing to foreclose, for only old Lamb and his confidential lawyer knew that. If he had known all these facts it might have seemed odd to him that old Lamb should form a partnership with him to buy a railroad of which he already owned nearly ninety-five per cent., but perhaps he might have understood, had he known that it was Lamb's custom to operate through two brokers, one to buy and the other to sell, and that he never let his right hand broker knew what his left hand broker was doing. So it happened that in the spring months Lamb sold all the stock of the road to himself and Ashley. Instead of owning all of it, Lamb now owned half and Ashley the other half. Then he made the discovery that nothing could prevent foreclosure, and Ashley found himself in possession of a lot of handsomely engraved certificates, and little else. Life began to seem rather interesting.

In these circumstances, Ashley showed some of the pluck and determination to make the best of it which had distinguished him when his side was overmatched at football. When he had sold the solid income-bearing stocks his grandfather had left him and given his check for the expenses of the blind pool he found that he would have about $10,000 left. He determined to go to Oregon, where one of his classmates was engaged in mining and lumbering. Other acquaintances had expressed sorrow for his bad luck, but no one made the slightest advance to lend him a helping hand. The rough Westerner had written him repeatedly to come out to the Pacific coast, and Jack felt that he could trust him. "I will go to see Orton," he said to himself, "and I will take off my coat and go to work, farming or lumbering or driving a team. I know I can drive as well as any man in New York. No more buying something I cannot see. To-morrow I will run up and bid Mary good-bye and tell her just how I stand, and leave. She will understand. She has sense."

He felt an odd pain as he said this, half aloud; something he had never felt before, but he only shut his mouth the more firmly. His old life and his old character seemed to fall from him, and his demeanor compelled even the admiration of the foxy old Lamb. "I'm pretty hard hit," said Jack to him, "but I don't propose to give up. I've got a good deal left and I mean to get as far from New York as I can."

"Have you? have you, Mr. Ashley?" said the old man eagerly. "How much?"

"I have youth and health, and my two hands," said Jack.

"Oh!" grunted the old man, rather disappointed to find that the rest of Jack's fortune was not available assets, though the thought fitted through his mind that if he could get what he "had left" it would be worth more than all the rest. "We have been a little unfortunate, Mr. Ashley. I lose twice as much as you."

"Yes," replied Jack. "You can stand it. It's the old story of the brass pot and the earthen pot. That was one of the first fables I read in Latin. I wish that I had learned it better, but Latin never did a fellow much good."
Something like compassion stirred the old man's dry heart. "If a loan would do you any good I will let you have five hundred on your note, or five thousand," he added, hastily, seeing the look of contempt on the young man's face.

"No, thank you," said Ashley, "I've got through borrowing and putting up margins. I'm going to work. Good-bye." He left the office, his head erect and his face set.

Old Lamb was more feared than respected. He was feared because he owned a powerful god, money, which most men worship. He had sacrificed to this god all his life. But he also owned a goddess, whom he worshipped even more devoutly. His daughter Mary was nearly twenty, and, as Lamb's wife had been dead for many years, this daughter came to represent an object of affection hardly less powerful than his absorption in money-getting. He rarely spoke to her, and she was absent from him most of the time, but her good looks and her girlish whims were a great delight to him, unconsciously, and in adding to his fortune his main thought was that it would all be hers some day. She had inherited some money from her mother, and it was the passion of Lamb's life to add to this. Since she was eighteen he had made some permanent investments in her name, and had encouraged her, with but indifferent success it must be admitted, to keep accounts and to look after her business affairs. Many a weary hour he had explained to her the immense difference between bonds, preferred stock, and common stock, and all the algebraical puzzles of the stock market. She was a very capable young woman and readily comprehended the points her father elucidated, though she was repelled by the profound selfishness which seemed to lie at the bottom of the entire system. She was, at the time of the last interview between Ashley and her father, visiting a married friend on the Hudson, and, as the young man was in the habit of visiting a friend of his in the same place, a friendship had sprung up between them. If Ashley had been asked he would probably have said that she was the daughter of old Lamb, of Lamb, Skinner & Co., but picnicking and tennis and driving were so entirely different from the turmoil of Wall Street that he never associated the father and daughter. The very morning that he resolved to bid her good-bye and found that his feeling for her was different from mere friendship she received a letter from her father, which read:

"My dear daughter:

I have sold a part of the T. P. and S. C. stock which really belonged to you, for I bought it ten years ago with some money that your mother left me. It cost very little and I have put the proceeds to your credit. You can buy a yacht or a house or anything you want. I won't put any restraint on my little girl. In fact it is all her own. I have put the money to your credit in the Geological Bank and enclose a statement showing a balance in six figures. Does it not look nice? Exercise independent judgment in investing.

Yr. aff. father,

Cornelius Lamb."
The letter did not produce an impression on the girl commensurate with its weighty import. She had money enough already, and "six figures," even if the first was a five, did not appeal to her very forcibly. Perhaps it was by chance that she drove alone in her village cart in the direction of the station about the time for the arrival of the afternoon train in which Ashley came from the city. At all events, as he was walking to his friend's house, carrying his bag, in a spasm of economy, he heard the sound of a horse's hoofs behind him, and Mary Lamb overtook him.

"Why, Mr. Ashley," she cried, "you here on a week day! Let me drive you to Mr. Tainter's gate. I am going right past it."

"Thank you, ever so much," said Jack, stepping into the cart.

"Why, what is the matter?" said she. "You look awfully determined. I thought even your back looked as if you had made up your mind. Have you had some bad news?"

There was a sympathetic note in her voice, but Ashley answered doggedly, "Well, yes, rather. Fact is, I have determined to go to Oregon, and it's really something of a wrench to leave all one's friends. Luckily I have no relatives who would care if I went there or to the bottom of the sea. I've determined to 'go West, young man,'" he added, gaily.

"Why, must you go?" said the girl, looking straight in front of her, as if the pony's harness needed close scrutiny.

"Why, you know, I had some money and I was such a fool as to speculate, and now I haven't any, and so——"

"But surely you can find something to do here. We shall all miss you so much."

"Perhaps I might," said Jack, bitterly. "Perhaps I might get ten dollars a week. What would that amount to? I should have all my old associations holding me back. When a man has to step down in the social world he must go to a new place where strength counts and start even."

"I think that is cowardly," said she.

"Perhaps it is. I could not bear to live here and hear of you every day. You and the others." he added hastily. "I am cowardly."

"No you are not. But, Jack, I have some money of my own. Papa lets me be entirely independent. Now you must borrow some of me and——"

"That I could not possibly do."

"Why not?"

"I could not be under obligations to you, because I think more of you than any other person in the world."

"I should think that would be a reason," said the girl. "What are friends good for if they don't help one another?"

"Don't you see," said the young man with decision, "that when a fellow loves a girl as I do you, he cannot possibly be under money obligations to her. You don't think I want to go away. I must."
“Oh, I cannot bear it,” said the girl, impulsively. “You are the only man that has ever spoken the truth to me. All the rest are lying and making believe. Oh, you mustn’t go.”

“I will come back,” said he, taking her disengaged hand. “I will come back as soon as I have shown myself a man.”

“But when will that be? And you may change. No, you will never change, nor shall I. I know that,” said she, as the young man kissed her tenderly.

“I know it, too,” said Jack. “You and I are not of the changing kind.”

Before Ashley left her that evening he had mentioned that he meant to try to sell what he could of his Tin Plate and Spanish Castle shares, though it must be owned that business formed but a small part of the staple of their conversation. He said that the minute he offered any of them, down went the price. He was rather inclined to regard the matter from the humorous standpoint, but when Mary Lamb heard the name of the road she became very serious. As soon as he was out of the house she flew up stairs and opened her father’s letter. The moment she saw the tell-tale initials she said half aloud: “Why, that is Jack’s money I have, and there is no way to get it back to him. I will not keep it, if I have to throw it in the river.” She remained some time in thought, and early next morning she went to New York and reached the house of one of the brothers Straightgood, bankers and brokers. What she said was never known, but John Straightgood, as he put an oblong slip of paper in his pocketbook, was overheard to say: “It shall be done at once, my dear, and it does you great credit. Not a word shall get out.” At all events, when Jack’s broker, on the opening of the board, said, rather perfunctorily, “I will sell one hundred Tin Plate at 35,” a broker who sometimes bought for the Straightgoods said promptly, “Taken.” “Want any more, same figure?” “How much?” “Sell you any part of fifteen thousand.” “Taken.” The memoranda were made and the stock actually delivered before Ashley got down town, and going into his broker’s office, said: “Could you sell any of the stuff?” “It is all sold,” replied his agent, and you can have your check before the bank closes. And now, Mr. Ashley, let me buy you some safe stocks.” Before the day closed Ashley was back nearly where he started, minus some thousand dollars, broker’s commissions, plus a good deal of valuable experience, and the Lamb family were again sole owners of the Tin Plate Railroad Co. Jack even had to buy a few shares from old Lamb’s broker, to make good his delivery, as his broker in his haste had sold more than he owned.

“Papa,” said Mary Lamb, next day, “I have taken your advice and bought some nice railroad stock. Tin Plate, they call it.” The old man was dumbfounded. “Tin Plate! Why, it isn’t worth a nickel. What you goin’ to do with it? Paper a room?” “Why, papa. I thought you said you wanted me to exercise independent judgment. I’m holding it for a rise,” said the girl.
"Your money's gone. Next time you ask me before you buy cats and dogs," replied old Lamb, savagely.

"I will, papa, dear, and, by the way, papa, Jack Ashley and I are going into a blind pool."

"Blind pool! Whose blind?"

"He is, papa dear. He wants to marry me."

"Seems to me," said her father, "that you are exercising a good deal of independent judgment. But I have nothing to say."

"Not even to congratulate me, papa?"

"Ashley is the one to be congratulated."

"Well, here he comes. Tell him you are glad."

"Mr. Ashley," said the old man, as Jack came into the room and he noticed his daughter's radiant face, "you have won more than I have lost. If this young lady is happy, I am content."

"So am I," said Jack. "More than content."

"But let me advise you to go into no more blind pools," said the old man with a grin, as the humor of the situation struck him.

"I certainly shall not," said the young man, fervently.

As the old man turned away, he said to himself: "It's all in the family."

Mary did not tell Jack that she had saved him from ruin till two years afterward, when their hearts had so grown together that it was impossible one should have a secret from the other. And then Jack did not mind, for it seemed quite a natural thing to do. Had she told him before they were married he would have been an unhappy man. Her woman's instinct told her when to keep silent and when to speak.
The Progress of Years

At evening as I stand alone,
On Trinity Hill and gaze away,
Across the valley to the west,
And watch the slow departing day;

And as I think how many days,
Have that same sun slowly sink,
Behind those everlasting hills,
And paint the sky a glorious pink,

Deep, solemn thoughts come crowding up,
Nor does the quiet of the night
Bring peace to my unquiet mind,
With thoughts of what is wrong, what right.

"The World grows worse," some people say,
"There is no progress under Heaven;
The lump is as it was before,
We've even lost the little leaven."
My thoughts fly back two hundred years,
Two centuries ago I stand
Alone on this same rocky hill,
The same prospect at my command.

Alone, yet not alone, for, see,
Not far away, a ghostly sight,
There stands a gloomy gallows tree,
And catches rays of fading light.

And from its long and silent arm,
There hangs a human shape, A man?
No! Heaven have mercy on their souls;
A woman's form: look, ye who can.

The fiery sun directly west,
The body of old Goody Brown,
As lone it hangs upon the tree,
Casts a long shadow on the town.

Across the village roofs it falls,
As slowly now the day expires,
Across the stately Meeting-House,
And lingers on the tall Church spires.

A few days since as Goody Brown,
Toiled slowly on her lonely way,
She stopped to say a cheery word
To children laughing in their play.

Three days had passed, when, strange to tell,
A sickness fell on little May,
On whom old Goody's kindly smile
Had chanced to fall, that fatal day.

Then up arise the honest folk
Of Hartford town, and with one voice,
They cry: "She is a witch, must die."
And in that thought they all rejoice.

To-day they hanged her on the tree,
On Gallows Hill, and then went down
To pray beneath that gloomy shade,
For the lost soul of Goody Brown.

Oh, Witchcraft, fatal blot of sin,
That looks so black upon the page
Of old New England's history,
And blacker grows from age to age.
But what a change the years have wrought,
    As slowly onward they have rolled.
What wealth of knowledge they have brought,
    As superstitions knell they've tolled.

Where stood that hideous gallows tree,
    A liberal Christian college stands.
Instead of Witchcraft's tyranny,
    The Witch of Science now commands.

The storied halls and noble towers
    Of Trinity have taught us well,
To trust the Great Creator's plan,
    Some day to ring Sin's final knell.

E. C. THOMAS.
A Soliloquy

I often lie beneath a tree,
And smoke my pipe reflectively,
   My latest meal digesting.
And there I watch the busy bee,
   Thinking how great a fool is he
To buzz about so busily
   When he, too, might be resting.

W. S. T.

Nocturne

To-night the stars are clouded deep,
   And veil the luster of their light,
And darkness' shadows slowly sweep
O'er hill and forest hushed in sleep,
   All silent till the morning bright:

But let not on your spirit creep
   The sorrow and the dread affright,
Forgetful of the journey steep,
   To-night.

To-night old memories throng, to-night,
   The quiet house and at us peep
From darkened corners, sad and white,
   Yet do not mourn their ghostly plight,
But close your eyes and never weep
   To-night.

Hervey Boardman Vanderbogart.

Dan Cupid

Dan Cupid went a hunting, with frolicsome intent.
   He saw two people 'neath a tree,
And at them, most mischievously,
His pointed arrows sent.

Alas, Dan Cupid's hunting left me in sorry plight,
   For while at me his shafts went true,
And pierced my poor heart through and through,
He missed my lady, quite.

W. S. T.
When the black night has drugged the world with sleep,
And the round orb of the red moon doth creep
Above the distant hills, and all the stars
Scatter through out the sky, like wandering sheep,

Then, through the stillness, fancies comes to me,
The shadows of the days that used to be,
All those past hours of joy and pain are now
But phantom ships, afloat on memory's sea:

I feel a longing and a vague unrest,
As if my soul to break the fastenings pressed,
Which bind it to the petty things of life,
And in the vastness seek some nobler quest.

I seem to see a gate before me there,
Beyond which beckon figures wondrous fair,
I stretch my hands to push away the gate,
And, lo, my fingers close on empty air.

So, in my wearied mind such fancies play,
Forbidding rest and driving sleep away,
Until the light above the eastern hills,
Scatters the night and tells of coming day.

W. S. T.
The Silent Thoughts

The best and noblest in us,
From our birth till the time we’re dead,
Are the thoughts that we cannot utter,
The words that we’ve never said.

The tender eyes of a mother,
The grace of a sweetheart’s smile,
A glance, a touch, or a token,
Are the things that make life worth while.

So when we have crossed the waters,
And our life is a tale that’s told,
And the great recording angel,
Is sorting the dross and gold,

When we’ve passed from this old world’s darkness,
To the light of the perfect day,
I think that the things we feel will count
Far more than the things we say.

Memory

In the sweet quiet of the after days,
When sinks the sun of life adown the west
And nature’s voice calm madrigals of rest
At evening’s close will tranquilly upraise,
Then once more through fond memory’s shadowed maze
We shall be wandering, not sad, opprest
With bitter thoughts, but truly doubly blest
By what was fairest in our present ways.

Then let us nobly strive, though hard the duty,
The master sculptor’s perfect dream of beauty
Is hewn with pain from cold resisting stone:
So thus the toil to-day doth shape to-morrow;
Let not our work be for our future sorrow,
But strive for right since that is peace alone.

Since the date of the last annual report, have been added to the Library 1,912 volumes, and 755 pamphlets. The most notable gift of the year was the famous copy of Audubon's great work on the birds of America, presented by Dr. Gurdon W. Russell of the class of 1834, our oldest living alumnus. The possession of this book alone would confer distinction upon a library.

The total strength of the Library, at the present date, is 42,648 volumes, and 27,090 pamphlets.

The total number of volumes taken out during the year has been 1,222, an increase over last year of 478 vols.

The following table gives the circulation by month and shows the character of the books drawn:

PROFESSOR Robb is to leave Trinity College. These few words carry a load of regret to Trinity men all over the country. During the seventeen years, which Dr. Robb has given us out of his life, no one has done more than he in developing the courses of instruction, in promoting interest in college affairs or in making our college prominent before the public. When he came the facilities of his department were small and the apparatus was limited to a few antiquated instruments. Under his guidance the progress has been so continuous that its rapidity has not surprised us, as it might well have done, and it has even seemed a matter of course that the department of Physics should be one of the most prominent in our college. His activity in the outside field of electrical engineering has been no less remarkable, and yet, with all the pressure of work he has found time to devote to development of our athletics and to the beautifying of the college grounds. He has laid the foundation of his department deep and the spirit of energy and progress which he has infused must ever remain a lasting benefit to us and our college.

In his new work he will find greater opportunities than we can afford, for training and equipping men for service in the world, and we cannot but congratulate the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute with all our hearts, in being able to number him on her rolls. To wish him success merely were superfluous, as that is assured, but we do wish him all the happiness that a long life can afford.

The Alphabet

A stands for Arthur, called Shorty for Short,
He'll out talk all the lawyers contained in a court.

B stands for Brown, to be Frank, who is better,
To give dignity, beauty and weight to this letter?

C's the condition which, like a bull pup,
Will hang to you grimly from Freshman year up.

D stands for Douglas, who runs with such vim
That only his worries can keep pace with him.

E stands for Edmund, with muscles so strong,
That we fear he'll pull up Gym and all before long.

F stands for Freshman, the college for them
Is a place which will change them from children to men.

G is the Glee Club who howl with such glee,
That it's worth traveling far their contortions to see.

H stands for "High" he is quite a big boy,
Yet an old silver mug is his chief pride and joy.

I is the "Ivy," a book you can't beat,
Without it no library's ever complete.
(If you don't believe this ask any of the Editors, or Andrew Carnegie.)

J's Captain Jimmie, it's easily guessed,
That "After the (Foot) Ball's" the song he likes best.

K is the Kicker, that know-it-all man,
Who'd remodel the Earth on his own special plan.

L stands for Larchar, a pool shark 'tis true,
But they say, that quite often he misses his cue.

M stands for "Monk" which is used by his friends,
As a term of endearment for Edward Lorenz.
N is the Nine—let's get out, every man,
And cheer them to victory whenever we can.

O is the Owl—a bird of such knowledge,
He must be an alumnus of Trinity College.

P stands for pies that are luscious and big.
Who eats them, you ask? Quit your foolin' there Brig.

Q stands for Quail. You'll agree he's a bird.
If ever his notes on the organ you've heard.

R is Rabbit Bruce, with his long silky hair,
Which he brushes each morning with wonderful care.

S is St. Patrick. From all I can hear,
The Freshmen remembered his birthday, this year.

T stands for Taylor, the hunter—I hear
That his hunting's more dangerous to dears than to deer.

U is the umpire at a Class Game,
His funeral's impressive, and great is his fame.

V stands for Velte, the best you can find,
We wish that there were a few more of his kind.

W is Welbel, who's so energetic,
That it's said that his energy's wholly Kinetic.

X Please Xcuse me, I think you had better
Endeavor to find your own rhyme for this letter.

Y stands for you, gentle reader—Be kind,
And seek, in this nonsense, amusement to find.

Z stands for Zero, and when you're in class,
If you say that means "Nothing" I don't think you'll pass.

VICTOR HERBERT,
The Composer of "TRINITY TRUE."

Was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1859, and is a grandson of Samuel Lover the famous Irish novelist. At the age of seven he was sent to Germany to begin his musical education, and from that time he has continuously and assiduously devoted his life to the acquisition of a thorough knowledge of his chosen art. His first position of prominence was that of principal violoncello player in the court orchestra at Stuttgart, and he was heard in many important concerts throughout Europe before accepting in 1886 an engagement as solo violoncellist in the Metropolitan Orchestra in New York. During the twelve years of his residence in the United States, Mr. Herbert has been prominently connected with the best orchestral organizations, and as soloist and conductor has become favorably known in the principal cities. For a number of years he was principal violoncello player in the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, and more recently held a similar position in Anton Seidl's Orchestra, where he was also Associate Conductor; and at the Worcester, Mass., Festival and elsewhere, before being called to Pittsburgh, Mr. Herbert demonstrated his ability as conductor.

Mr. Herbert appeared as conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra for the first time on the evening of November 3, 1888, and the success then achieved and repeated at following concerts, was without parallel in musical Pittsburgh.

Mr. Herbert has won distinction as a composer, the list of his later orchestral works include the "Suite Romantique," Op. 31, brought out in New York at the Pittsburgh Orchestra concert of Jan. 23, 1900, and Symphonic Poem, "Hero and Leander," Op. 33, played in New York on Jan. 22, 1901. Suite "Woodland Fancies," Op. 34, Dec. 1904. In the department of opera comique, Mr. Herbert, like the late Sir Arthur Sullivan has added to the pleasure of nations. The years of unremitting service Mr. Herbert has given in the rehearsal and concert room of the Pittsburgh Orchestra has demonstrated his possession of pre-eminent qualifications for the position of Conductor.

VULCABESTON
MOULDED MICA
SACHS "NOARK" FUSES
AYNOR shut his silver cigarette case with a meditative snap, and looked at it absently.

"I wonder," he said finally, "what I should do without you. You don't know what a comfort it is to me to have you—someone who understands me so, some one to whom I can tell everything that troubles me and be sure of being understood and sympathized with—you know so well—" He paused to note the effect of his words and to watch with inward amusement the color rise through her clear skin (just as he knew it would). She opened her lips to speak, but closed them again, saying nothing, and he noted with no trace of compunction, but rather with satisfaction that light which was in her eyes.

"Why, do you know," he went on, throwing minor inflections into his voice, making it very low and appealing, "do you know that I have seen all of the world for twenty-five years, Margaret. And I am so tired—so tired—often I have wished I were lying dead under the ground. There I should have rest, quiet, nothingness, no misunderstanding, no mistakes. And now, Margaret, what have you done to me. I want to live for you. I would rather see the understanding in your eyes—rather hear your voice speak my name than—Margaret, what shall I do?"

She had not moved. Little streaks of sunlight fitfully crossed and recrossed her bronze hair as the breeze waved the branches above her head, and in her eyes was the quiet blue of the sky and the light of the sun-kissed waters lapping the lake shore at her feet. Something very like affection touched him momentarily, she was so little and so sweet and so pathetic. But she said nothing, and an impulse of irritation sprang up within him. He must make her exhibit some feeling. He had amused himself with drawing her on for weeks now, and to-day when he craved a climax she sat silent and gave him no satisfaction. He had tried the effect of his voice and his eyes, and he could see by the look in hers that she was affected, but he desired more.

"One can almost always reach a woman with the pitiful," he soliloquized, and he drew himself nearer her on the pine-needle covered ground. He bent his head low and twisted the end of her scarf between his fingers, having the satisfaction of knowing she turned toward him.

"I have been very unhappy, dear," he whispered. "You do not know,—my nature is a very unhappy one, and living in this world is very hard for such a man as I. You are the only one who comes anywhere near understanding me, and, Margaret, to care as I care—to care as I care for you——"

She cried his name with a half sob, and he bent his head still lower. She noted with sudden pain all the fine silver lines in the beautiful hair.

"It is true, it is true," he said, forcing a hopeless tone into his voice, "I care so for you that I do not care for another thing on earth. I see you in everything. There's not a beautiful flower which I see without thinking of your lips.—your lips,—if I should tear my love for you out of my life, then there would be nothing left. Good God, if I should take the love for you out of everything what would be left of the world."

He turned his face toward her, his eyes dark with pain, and hopeless. He was a marvelously convincing actor, and she, womanlike, searched his face with so tender a gaze, with all her love for him in her eyes, that he thought swiftly.

"I wonder what she would do if I should take her hand. It is strange that in all these weeks I have been really, really afraid to try to take her hand. She is so young, too. Where can she have learned such self-repression? By heaven, she shall show me some feeling."

"Why will you not say something," he pleaded. "Is it that you think there are others? I never can care for another as I have for you. Yes, I know I have spent most of my time with other girls here this summer, but it is because I wouldn't make you conspicuous by paying you too much attention. To see them makes me love you better."

He clasped her hand firmly in his and drew it against his breast.

"My dear, my dear, my dear," he whispered, "Love me, do love me. I love you so I cannot live without your love. I want it so——" He drew her to him swiftly and kissed her lips again and again.

"Harry, Harry," she said, breathless with the realization of the greatness of his love, "I love you, too, I love you, I——"

He sprang to his feet with a sudden loud laugh. Now his object was accomplished, now her feeling was expressed, he wanted no more, except, perhaps, deeper feeling expressed.

"You little, foolish girl," he said, "did you really think I cared? You sweet, dear child,—but—I am going to ask Miss Wetherington to be my wife—this very afternoon. I think I need her millions in my business."

There was a Princess of Timbuctoo,
And she loved, as only a maid can do,
A rollicking Irish sailor lad,
But her Pa, the King, was bold and bad
And swore a swear, when her love he saw,
That he'd have no Irish son-in-law.
And preparations at once began
For the demise of that Irishman.
Orders were given, with kingly guile
To serve the sailor boy up in style.
And so the cook, when the fire was hot,
Popped the poor Irishman in the pot.
And when the Princess came in that night,
And ate with a splendid appetite,
She shed a tear with a loud "boo-hoo,"
When she partook of the Irish stew.
And this is the story, sad, but true,
Of the beautiful Princess of Timbuctoo.

All the savage in him watched her as he made the speech, watched to see the spirit break. It was a terrible crisis for her, but beyond her own proud spirit stood that of many generations. For a moment her face became a white mask, with the brilliant thread of red purple where her lips crossed it, and on the left cheek were the marks of the spruce tree trunk against which it had been pressed. Then rang out her laugh, natural, and clear, and scornful.

"Oh, you little, little man," she said; "light heart goes with light heels. Do you know who I am? I am La Sulli! Now—ah, I see you know me now. Well, then, I need hardly remind you that my vocation is dancing."

II.

The rain had not yet come, but each crash of thunder and streak of lightning seemed to tear the black clouds in twain and show the lurid yellow sky behind. At the foot of the precipice the heavy black waves broke into angry white with hushed dread expectancy. But Margaret, looking down, saw only the oblivion in their darkness, and the white tips like little spirits raising themselves in soft invitation to her. An unearthly light showed in her face, born of high courage and of hopeless grief. She had passed through a passion of madness of pain, and now it had gone and left her calm.

"If I fall over in the storm they will never know I meant it, it is merciful and will carry me over gently. See! The waters call me and reach for me—I couldn’t live on, and on, and on, and he will never know. La Sulli’s business is breaking hearts, and he believed that I was she—let him know? Thank God in his goodness that he gave me strength to hide myself—and he will never know I loved him. I fooled him well—the fooler fooled." and she laughed a little wildly. "O God, that there are men in the world like him—to kill a spirit for amusement. But oh—I love him. That God should make a man so beautiful and so wicked. I love him—I love him—I love him—and I shall die because I love him so. But he will never know. Harry, Harry Gaynor, God guard you and keep you, and turn his heart. Oh dear God! my life has been short, and I have not troubled you much, and all I ask of you is this: Keep and guard dear Harry, and forgive him and turn his heart. Amen. Goodbye, world, be very good to my Harry."

Once more the thunder clashed and the lightning flashed, and the rain fell. And down, down, down across the black rocks fell the little

III.

"I think, Miss Wetherington," and Harry held the oars stationary for a moment, and let the boat drift, "that you have the most exquisite taste in dress. Now nothing could bring out the gold in your hair like that blue gown, and your complexion is very white in contrast to that yellow ribbon."

"Really, Mr. Gaynor, you shouldn't say such things. You say them to everyone, I am sure." But her face showed the pretty satisfaction his words gave her.

"No," he answered, "only those of whom they can be true."

Something in the direct gaze of his eyes, his open and evident admiration made her fidget with her parasol, and the conscious look in her face increased. Into his mind at the same moment came with curious insistence and an unexplainable pang of tenderness the memory of bronze lights in the rich hair above a pair of sea gray eyes. And at the thought he shook his shoulders with an impatient shrug. "Who would have thought that that innocent looking child could be La Belle Sulli—the sweetness of her face, the hair, the eyes—bah! La Sulli, the dancer. Well, I was well fooled."

Miss Wetherington was a bit impatient at his preoccupation. She was far from clever, though rather pretty in an artificial sort of a way, and petted and spoiled by family, friends, and society. Hers was a little nature, and intensely selfish and superficial.

Gaynor was reminded of her presence by the impatient action of one little foot beneath her silken skirts, which noting, he made the remark of admiration, which it invited, and followed his words swiftly with these:

"You are very beautiful, Alice, and with all your discernment you will hardly be surprised at what I am going to say. You must have seen it, that I love you; that I always have loved you, and that your beauty has always been before my eyes and blinded me to any other woman. You are one of the rare ones of the earth who can love. I—I know I am not a 'good catch' from a worldly point of view, but you are above all that. Alice, I cannot imagine any greater happiness than being with you always. My darling, what would I not do for you? To feel you beside me on the box; to get you yachts, horses, houses; to enter with you in the ballrooms and hear the low murmur, ‘That is Harry Gaynor’s wife. Lucky devil.’ Alice, I know I am not half worthy of a look from your dear eyes, not worthy by comparison to the many who have loved you, but if only you would give me this happiness, I care not what happens. I only know, I want you to marry me. Will you?”

“But you have paid attention to lots of girls here.”
“I wouldn’t mark you by my admiration.”
“I do not choose to be one of many.”
“You are one out of many.”
“Will you really be proud of me, only me, when we are together, and give me yachts, and houses, and take me everywhere I want to go?”
“Yes,” answered Gaynor.
“And never flirt with other women and break my heart?”
“No,” he answered, smiling at the conceit that all women think they have hearts to be broken.
“Then I will marry you.”
“And let me put this on your finger now.” And he slipped on a beautiful solitaire, kissing the hand and holding it off to admire with the ring glittering on it.

A moment later he was rowing home at his best speed, urged on by the threatening sky. Black and blacker it grew, and blacker and blacker grew the rock precipice which overshadowed them. A low cry sounded in the intense silence, following a crash of thunder, and by a sudden glare of lightning he saw the white face and bronze hair on a foam-framed rock. Something seemed to drop out of his life. Something seemed to break through the artificial part of his nature, and for the first time in his life, perhaps, he was dominated by instinct alone.

“Margaret,” he whispered, hoarsely. He turned the boat toward the rock.
“What are you doing, Harry? Mercy, we will be killed. See the waves break against that rock. Stop, stop!”

But with lips set in determination, never hearing Alice’s cries, he pulled on, guiding the boat in and out among the treacherous rocks. It seemed a miracle that it at last reached the rock on which Margaret lay without disaster. Very tenderly he lifted the unconscious form, faint and stricken at the sight of its mangled condition. With it in his arms he stepped into the boat.

“Row, for God’s sake, Alice, quick; the child is dying; quick——”
“But I——”

"Row!" he commanded savagely.

"My little one—my own darling," he whispered. And then he looked at her with such dumb suffering in his eyes that even Alice understood and dared do nothing but whimper weakly as she pulled the oars. The beautiful head was unmarred and peaceful, but the poor little body was dreadfully crushed. Oblivious to all else, Gaynor held her in his arms, uttering disjointed sentences and moaning from time to time like a dumb animal in pain.

"Margaret, Margaret, I love you—I love you—it’s no one but you—I hurt you so—to-day—I, who would never hurt you—O God, O God, I am a beast—but I love you, I love you, I love you. If you will only live I will care for you all the days of my life.—They shall be atonement, all—all—you shall wish for nothing—and I will serve you all my life—Margaret—"

The gray eyes were open, conscious, with perfect peace in their depths.

"Harry—“ He bent low to catch the faint whisper. "I am not La Sulli—I am dying—I think—I——" The eyes closed

"Margaret," he cried in anguish, "you shall not die—you shall not. Open you eyes again. For now I love you, and you shall stay with me—you believe—oh, if you will believe—I think I should die of happiness. Margaret,—forgive me—forgive me."

The eyes opened, a smile of infinite peace came into the face.

"I—believe—I have nothing—to—forgive—I love—Harry——"

And then the tired eyes closed forever, and reverently Gaynor buried his face in her hair—alone with his new life and his little grief.

What's the use of worrying?
It doesn't pay to fret,
Rain will never stop because
You stand out in the wet.
If the day is gloomy,
With shadows all about
The sun is all the brighter
When, at last, it does come out.
So never fret or worry,
Just laugh and trust to time,
Night is blackest just before
The stars begin to shine.

CONNECTICUT GENERAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF HARTFORD.

Robert W. Huntington, Jr., President.

Life Insurance means a sure provision for old age and in event of death an equally sure protection for the family.

The CONNECTICUT GENERAL issues an up-to-date policy that contains special advantages at most favorable rates. This is one reason why our gain in insurance in force for year 1901 in Connecticut was not equalled by any Hartford Company.

Home Office Agents.

H. A. Farnsworth  P. G. Gorton  J. C. Gorton

1x
AFTER a successful business experience of fifty years is stronger, safer and more progressive than ever. All of its policies are Incontestable after two years, and have extended Insurance, Loan, Cash and Paid-up Values endorsed thereon. We invite inspection of our new Life Rate Endowment Policies, also our Life, Endowment and Annuity Contracts, under which the Company guarantees to either men or women, when the Insured is Fifty, Sixty or Seventy years old, it will pay $1,500 IN CASH FOR EVERY $1,000 OF INSURANCE IN FORCE.

We also issue all forms of Term, Limited Premium Policies, and Annuities, by which a person can secure a stated income for life. If you are contemplating insurance or the purchase of an annuity, we suggest a comparison of our contracts with those offered by any other company. For sample policies, terms, et cetera, address the Home Office, Hartford, Conn., or any of its Agents in the principal towns of the United States.

Summer School, (Eight weeks, June-August), 35 Nassau Street.

Degree of L.L.B. after two years' course; of L.L.M. after three years' course. Prepares for bar of all States. Number of students for the present year (1901-1902), 831, of whom 260 are college graduates. The method of study pursued aims to give the student a thorough knowledge of legal principles and of the reasons upon which they rest, and to render him well equipped for the practice of his profession. The location of the School in the midst of the courts and lawyers' offices affords also an invaluable opportunity to gain a knowledge of court procedure and the practical conduct of affairs.

STULTZ & BAUER Pianos Talk

for us—and while we sing their praises it's simply to gain an audience—the pianos do the rest. Our greatest advertisement is the fact that Stultz & Bauer Pianos always give perfect satisfaction, as is attested by the large number of letters voluntarily sent us by delighted purchasers. There are plenty of pianos not so good as the Stultz & Bauer—there are none better. Our terms to purchasers are the most accommodating in Hartford, and our pianos are guaranteed for 10 years.
