A mountain of turkeys, 110 in all, were donated by the 500 students who eat on campus to families in Hartford for the holidays. The students voted to forego their annual Christmas banquet and to purchase turkeys instead for needy families. Maintenance Workers End Strike; Education Offer Aids Settlement

A week-long strike at the College by unionized workers in the Buildings and Grounds Department ended December 10.

The 76 members of the Service Employees International Union Local 531, AFL-CIO, which includes the non-supervisory personnel of the B & G Department ended their strike which began December 2 by ratifying a new contract with the College.

The College had remained open during the strike with many students taking on housecleaning and supervisory personnel in B & G keeping vital supplies coming to their homes.

Food service personnel were not out on strike and supervisory personnel of the Saga Food Service brought food to the campus in cases where unionized truck drivers honored picket lines which were set up at campus gates during the strike.

The College and Union negotiators had reached agreement on non-economic issues before the old contract expired on November 24 but an extension of the old contract through December 2 still brought no agreement on disputes over wages and fringe benefits.

The strike ended when the Union broke the stalemate over wages by agreeing to accept the College's offer of an average 7% wage boost. The Union's demand had been for a 10.6% increase across the board. The College maintained that its offer of approximately 7% was "the best offer consistent with the financial constraints under which we operate as a non-profit institution."

Many of the negotiation sessions were under the guidance of state and federal mediators as was the last one on December 9 at which a tentative agreement was reached and ratified the next day by the Union membership.

One of the developments at the last meeting was an offer by the College to conduct special classes for Union personnel where there is a need and an interest. One of the clauses that had an immediate interest was instruction in English. About half of the employees in the local Union speak Spanish or Portuguese and do not have English as a native language. This proposal was enthusiastically received by many members of Local 531. Classes in other studies will be arranged and the sessions will be held on campus probably at the end of a work day.

The new two-year contract provides for automatic reopener annually on wages and fringe benefits. Under the terms of the new contract, the Union accepted the College's offer for an automatic reopener of $20 per month, an hour increase for new employees at the completion of 90 days of service, and a 10 cents an hour increase at the end of one year's service. The latter provision immediately affects about half of the employees in the Union.

The new pact also provides an option for employees contributing to the pension fund. They may elect to continue the 5% contribution or elect annually to add this to their take-home pay. In either case, the College will continue to contribute an amount equal to 6% of the employee's pay to the pension fund.

The Union agreed to continue to accept the College's health plan and medical benefits and the College agreed to increase pay for the work on holidays from time and a half to double time.

Classes continued during the strike and the students generally displayed an attitude of understanding for the College during the controversy and a genuine interest in the issues although active support of the picket lines was limited to 20-25 students. At the strike ended students were taking up a collection to provide for a turkey and food basket for the holidays for each Union member in a gesture of goodwill for the loss of pay during the strike.

President Lockwood has asked the Curriculum Committee to consider establishing a three-year bachelor's degree program.

In a letter asking consideration of a three-year program option to the Committee, Dr. Lockwood said two reasons prompted his suggestion. "First," he wrote, "I sense that at this time of considerable curricular fluidity, we shall see many experiments to provide for greater flexibility in the pace at which students complete their undergraduate program.

He said at one extreme there were students who could profit from interrupting their education and "a prospect which changes in the selective service system may permit," he added and "at the other extreme we have those who could profit most from being encouraged to finish their undergraduate studies more rapidly -- not simply acceleration in the accumulation of credits, but as a more rapid acquisition of a grasp of the mind and intellectual mastery."

Secondly he observed, "The emphasis on specialization has slackened. Now may be the time in which to recognize explicitly the differing paces at which students fulfill these goals."

In considering a three-year degree program Dr. Lockwood said, "It should be voluntary...it should be different...not simply acceleration..." and he added, "my assumption is that it would most likely involve qualifying examinations rather than credit accumulation."

He said that such a program might tend "to attract the better student." However, he said, "It is not alone the superior student who profits. What the program recognizes is that students differ in the 'readiness' with which they achieve the goals we set."

In his communication to the Curriculum Committee, President Lockwood said, "Society may prefer that we provide four years suspension from labor during the ages 16-22; but I would hope we would not plan education in those terms. Therefore I admit that this program should incorporate the possibility of interruption."

He also said such a program might take the form of a student finishing his degree in three years and then optionally pursue a master's degree during the following 12 months."

He said that some might view a three-year program as "a contraction and therefore a diminution" President Lockwood said "I do not; for I feel we have moved away from that kind of measurement in higher education."

He told the Committee that he considered the proposal for a three-year degree program "as a logical extension of the philosophy inherent in our new curriculum."

Since September 1969, Trinity has been under a curriculum which places maximum emphasis on flexibility of students selecting their course of study, without the rigid five-year major, in order to fulfill their own educational objectives and needs.

While the flexibility of the current curriculum allows for extending study for a degree to five years or acceleration in a three-year program, the latter is not a formalized option to which President Lockwood is giving consideration. He urged that the Committee first examine the philosophical implications of such a program at a liberal arts college, and then investigate the mechanics of implementation.

Miller N.E. Coach Of The Year

Don Miller has been elected New England College Division Football Coach of the Year by vote of head college coaches in the region in the annual poll conducted by United Press International.

Miller's honor, coupled with an earlier selection of the 1970 Bantos as New England Champions and Dave Kiaris being voted Player of the Year in East, (see page 8) made it a banner year for Trinity in football.

"This is a great honor," said Miller "but I do not look upon it as a personal award. It should be shared by our staff, administration, our entire squad and our loyal supporters." He again praised the "great attitude and determination," of the members of the squad for the success of the 1970 team which finished 7-1, the best record at Trinity since 1955.

All the more remarkable was the fact that the nucleus of this eleven came from a squad which posted a 3-4-1 slate in 1969, the first losing effort with which Miller has been associated with in 18 years of football.

The former Little All-American Quarterback at the University of Delaware paced the Blue Hens to three winning years (1952-54) including a Refrigerator Bowl victory in 1954. He was graduated from Delaware in 1955 and received a Master's degree in education from there in 1957.

He was head coach at Newark (Del.) High School for three seasons where his teams compiled a 31-2 record and he was named High School Coach of the Year in Delaware in 1957. He served as an assistant under Jim Osterhoudt at Ambler from 1959-1964 in a period in which the Lord Jeffs were 35-9.

Miller came to Trinity and joined the late Dan Jesse as an assistant in 1965 and assumed the head coaching job upon Dan's retirement after the 1966 season. Miller's teams have compiled an overall record of 22-9-2 during the last four seasons.
Dr. NORTON DOWNS, professor of Sinology, has reviewed two art books for the December issue of Art in America. "The Master of Mary of Burgundy: A Book of High Gothic" by P. L. C. De Keyser, and "Carolingian" by J. Hubert, J. Pinault, and W. Helbing. Both books were published by Brepols.

STEPHEN MINOT, adjunct associate professor of history, spoke at two lectures at Roger Williams College in Bristol, Rhode Island. His current critical anthology of fiction entitled "Three Stances of Modern Fiction" with Bulky Wajon Jr., of the University of Northern Iowa, to be published by Wipf & Stock, a subsidiary of Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Poetry by Dr. HUGH S. GIDDEN, assistant professor of English, recently appeared in the New England Review. He is currently chairman of the Trinity College Poetry Center which is instrumental in bringing poets to the campus.

The second annual CAROLYN R. BOLBACH MEMORIAL LECTURE will be delivered on Monday, February 25, in the Chapel by Dr. IRVING LEVINE, associate professor of history, University of Northern Iowa, to be published. "The Battle of the Books: A History of the American Bookshop," by Dr. Levine, will be the featured lecture.

The Trinity Alumni Association will hold meetings on February 22 in Pittsburgh and on March 3 in Philadelphia. President LOCKWOOD plans to attend.

Trinity students responded generously to a fund-rais ing effort for victims of the Pakistan disaster. CHANGEZ KOURI, assistant professor of environmental studies, and other students collected approximately $500 which was mailed to the Pakistan ambassador to the United States.

The traditional Christmas Vespers held annually in the Chapel has become so popular that this year ROBERT GRONQUIST, assistant professor of music and director of Chapel music, predicted a standing room crowd in the Chapel when the service begins at 5:00 p.m.

Trinity has recorded another first. The Trinity/Rome campus, which was established last summer, will again be active when faculty and students converge to the villas and dormitory style dwellings on the Aventine Hill overlooking the Tiber, the location of Trinity's newest overseas summer program.

Last year 112 students from 23 institutions enrolled in the six-week program, giving them the opportunity to broaden their cultural horizons and to combine academic work with immediate exposure to a different and stimulating environment.

In commenting on last year's program, Dr. Michael R. Campo, co-chairman of the Modern Languages Department, and director of the Trinity/Rome campus, said:

"Judging from the comments of students, faculty members, visitors and other observers, the program was a most satisfying educational success.

"In talking with persons in Rome who have worked with several American universities on a similar program in Italy and who are quite familiar with most of them, the Trinity/Rome campus is regarded as one of the best American summer educational programs in Italy known to them.

The summer program is designed as part of the undergraduate program offered on the main campus. Students may earn transferable semester hours credit for two courses. While primarily designed for undergraduates, special arrangement may be made for some graduate credit. Courses are taught in English except those in the Italian language and literature.

Excursions, informal study tours and side trips will be arranged for certain weekends and integrated into the educational program. Included in the program at no extra cost are two excursions - one to Florence, another to Assisi, and five day trips and around the city of Rome. There will also be time, especially at the end of the program, for students to travel independently.

Again this year, there will be an archaeological program which will be conducted on an all-over program, and in Rome and the area around Cerveteri, a city of Etruscan origin. There will also be an archeological excursion to the iron-age excavation sites about 25 miles north of Rome. This program will be directed by LAMAR B. WARR, an associate professor of classics, Washington Square College, New York University.

Post-Election Symposium Spurs Debate On Future

John F. Baberhun 72
Former Tripod Editor

The collapse of the traditional urban machine, the cyclical pattern of American politics, and the mistakes of the Republican Party in November were topics of discussion at a post-election symposium December 4 and 5 at Trinity.

The symposium, entitled "The 1970 Election and the Future of American Politics," featured lectures Friday night by Dennin H. Wosong, Dorrance visiting professor of sociology; George F. Will, Class of 1962, legislative aide to Senator Gordon Allott, R-Colo; and Murray S. Stedman Jr., professor of political science at Temple University and former department chairman at Trinity.

The municipal elections promise more of the same type of urban governance that has failed to "handle substantive problems" for the last two decades, according to Stedman. The "brokerage politics" of the traditional urban machine, he noted, "is becoming less and less relevant to the needs of the day."

In spite of its victory at the polls, "it has been repudiated, or in the process of being repudiated, by significant groups in the last two decades," Wosong said.

Wosong's lecture attempted to "locate the present in relation to a much broader context of not merely current politics but of democratic politics in general, a conception of what might be called the rhythm of democratic politics." Wosong described this rhythm as a "pattern of oscillation between periods in which democracy is successful and periods in which it is not."

The Dorrance Professor concluded that "the violence, actual and rhetorical, of some political activists identified with the left has certainly done damage to the prospects of the groups in whose name it has been committed...it is by no means clear that the public is prepared to forget the unresolved issues raised in the 60's or that the Nixon administration is capable of diffusing them even with the ending of the Vietnam War."

Will found the 1970 elections inconclusive. While the Republicans were in a good position to gain, they ran a poor campaign, according to Will. Both parties, he concluded, lost the election.

If 1970 taught anything, Will declared, is taught us that it pays to be more careful in selecting the people. This year, he noted, neither party did.

In addition to the lectures Friday night, each speaker led a workshop Saturday morning. The program then concluded with a summary panel discussion.

A four-schedule speaker, Brendan Sexton, the Educational Director of the United Automobile Workers (UAW), did not attend the symposium. Sexton would not cross the picket line of striking College Buildings & Grounds workers, members of Local 531, Service Employees Union, A.F.L-C.I.O.

Stedman's talk, entitled "Toward a New-Style Politics?" declared that the "brokerage politics" of urban government was doomed to fail because it had failed to deal with such issues as "schools, race relations, crime, welfare, and housing."

The old-style politics, without a base in the people and without organization, punishments and attacks has not been able to satisfy "excluded groups in the urban community," including Blacks, Puerto Ricans, and the elderly, he said.

Old-style politics are "obsolescent" because they are based upon "pluralism," or the conflict of groups, Stedman said. " Traditionally, pluralists have believed that the conflict of groups is resolved in an acceptable--even a just--equilibrium," Stedman explained.

"This equilibrium, however, is one in which the strongest groups have succeeded in getting what is, is what is getting be said."

The quest of government to overcome existing slums and the elderly everywhere--find the themselves observers instead of participants in the political process." Stedman, vice chairman of the Government Department at the College until 1968, also criticized brokerage politics for its inability to establish new political structures.

"In the system of competing interests, he said, "every interest of any significance must be appeased."

"As a result, no problem is really ever solved," he concluded. "To temporize is better than to come grips with the real issues."

Stedman said the new style politics would have six characteristics:

1) A new emphasis on ethnic voting.

2) Demands for "welfare-state type of programs."

3) Development of "mau-mau" politics based on political philosophies, as is common in Europe.

4) "Inside the cities, a kind of politics of federalism based on local communities--may develop."

5) The cities will attempt to bypass the state bureaucracies as much as possible and "forge a city-federal government axis."

6) An increasing scope and intensity of political activity.

Stedman said the form of new-style politics would be primarily influenced by the drive for community control and the mass movements of Blacks and the elderly and chicanos.

In order to set up and enforce primary the new system of rewards "some kinds of persuasion or coercion not currently employed under the present system " (see SYMPOSIUM, page 5)

ANNUAL GIVING REPORT

As of December 17, pledges to the Alumni Fund were reported as $92,682 (same time last year $73,003) toward the goal of $200,000.

Of pledges to the Parents Fund amounted to $30,424 (same time last year $14,740) toward the goal of $100,000.

In the Business and Industry category -- where the goal is $50,000 -- pledges were reported at $15,915.

Solicitation among the Friends of Trinity had not begun when this report was compiled.

Chapel 'Joy Box' Attracts Many

During November and December, students, faculty, members of the administration and groups from the Greater Hartford area made a point of going to the Trinity Chapel. The attraction was a singularly unusual one--a Joy Box.

What is a "Joy Box?" According to the Rev. Ortis Charles, Class of 1948, one of the men who constructed the box, it is "A ten by ten room in which people can move and interact."

The Joy Box was developed by Vienna Cobb Anderson, graphics designer of Reston, Va.; Tom Babitt, Litchfield, Conn.; architect and Charles, who is executive secretary of Associated Parishes, which is sponsoring the Joy Box at Trinity. The Associated Parishes wanted an exhibit for the 1969 Liturgical Week that would speak to the power of the people becoming involved with one another in worship. The result was the Joy Box.

Charles also stated that the Joy Box was an attempt to show that worship was enhanced by a shared awareness of participants. It seeks to have people create their own experience by touching switches which trigger lights, horns, bubble makers, sounds, illuminated words such as "Tilt" and "Love."

Charles further explained that the Joy Box was a tangible thing. It makes people touch and reach around one another.index on the one hand, the participants are responsive to another and to the environment there may be an event -- a celebration by a group of people who share an experience of their own creation. Trinity Chapel Alan C. Tull, who was responsible for bringing the Joy Box to the College gave his own description:

"To enjoy the Joy Box means being sensitive to what one does in it and at its fullest. It means connecting with other people. When that happens, it really lights up -- not unlike other situations."

The Joy Box has also been exhibited at the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in South Bend and at the regular triennial convention of the Episcopal Church in Houston from which it went to Trinity. This was its first major public showing in the Northeast.

"The Position of Non-Violence in a Violent Time."

"The Life and Legend of Hoy F. Long."

"Puerto Rican Dilemma."

"British Contemporary Music."

The Reporter Looks At:

The New Curriculum At Work

The two articles which follow—written by Miss Judy Dworin '70, the first woman to receive a bachelor's degree from Trinity and now serving as an administrative intern in the College—the other written by Reporter staffer Mrs. MILLI SILVESTRI—focus attention on two significant innovations of Trinity’s year-old curriculum, the Freshman Seminars and the optional Open Semester program.

Freshman Seminar Program

Judy Dworin '70

Administrative Intern

"The Freshman Seminar Program is the most successful new curricular option at Trinity." This opinion was expressed by N. Robbins Winslow, dean of curriculum, the freshman seminar educational services, and the enthusiasm incoming freshmen. Too often, freshmen program.

One student may select an open seminar in which a topic is chosen by the students and professors after the first few seminar meetings, or he may choose a seminar according to a specific topic which has been pre-selected by the professor. This year there were 22 pre-selected topic seminars and 13 "open" seminars. Of the pre-selected seminars, topics ranged from "Sport and American Society" to "The Crusades: 11th to the 20th Century."

The freshman seminar, as well as being a new and innovative teacher-learning experience for all involved, is also designed to provide more a personal advising system. The professor of a particular seminar is not the only student leader, but is also the advisor to his students until they choose a major field of study.

There is an opportunity for more understanding and closer relationship in student advising as a result. This was considered to be the most successful aspect of the 1969-70 seminar program in a report published by Dr. Richard T. Lee, associate professor of philosophy, and last year’s co-ordinator of the program.

The present co-ordinator, Dr. Borden W. Painter Jr., associate professor of history, also feels that the advising aspect of the seminars is most successful.

Although an evaluation of this year’s program is forthcoming in the form of a questionnaire prepared by Dr. Painter, Dean Winslow, and Amy Yatkin '74, Dr. Painter feels the reaction among freshmen has been positive. He found the majority of students anxious to participate in the program and that the real problem was to find enough seminars to accommodate the number of students.

Another aspect of the program which Dr. Painter found successful was the opportunity for upperclassmen to act as teaching assistants in the program.

Neither professors nor students seem to question the basic idea of freshmen seminars. Any dissatisfaction appears to be in methods of implementing the program or personal grievances. Many professors feel that it has given them an opportunity to try new methods of teaching. As Mitchell Pappas, Associate Professor of Fine Arts remarked, "It allows the student and professor to really rub shoulders intellectually...It does a lot for the professor; it makes a teacher out of him." In Pappas' seminar, which has explored the visual arts and their relationship to society, the students have visited museums and also have used the "Civilization" movie series with Kenneth Clark, which Connecticut ETV has made available.

Dr. Clyde D. McKe, associate professor of political science, has implemented two Connecticut ETV programs in his seminar on the "Politics of Environmental Policy Making." He finds the seminar experience to be very satisfying. In his own words, "I rarely speak in growing terms about anything, but in this particular instance, I can." His group has also taken a trip to Wesleyan Hills housing development, gone on walking tours of Hartford, and is planning an all-college presentation of slides taken by students from individual experiences.

Dr. E. Earle Fox, assistant professor of religion, chose his seminar topic on "Authority" because it "in a new way, the going thing." As an object lesson in how authority works, he allowed his students to explore the topic in relation to any field of their choice; they could write a paper only if they were so motivated, and they will grade themselves according to their "authority." He noted that his students have responded well and are "much more willing to debate on an intellectual basis."

As a first-time experience in bringing athletics to the seminar table, Chester Painter, assistant professor of physical education, found his seminar on "Sport and American Society" well received. The seminar is most successful.

An innovation in Trinity's new curriculum, which has received national attention among educators, is the "Open Semester." This provision literally opens up the world to a student. The "Open Semester" is an option which, if exercised by a student, allows time and credit for a semester of approved independent study, research or internship on off-campus.

Working with a faculty adviser, a student submits a proposal for approval to take an open semester. The proposals are coordinated by Dean N. Robbins Winslow of the office of educational services. Last year 37 students took an "Open Semester" and in the first term of the current semester, 20 students have exercised the option.

In many cases the selected projects required more time and were more demanding than a semester in the classroom. The projects were many and varied.

For example, senior David Green of Kew Gardens, N.Y. went to Washington D.C., where he interned in the office of Senator Vance Hartke of Indiana. The result was that he is in so well that six other senators wrote the College for student interns.

Michael Reinsel, a senior from Wyoming, Pa., selected the Central Connecticut Regional Center for Environmentally Disadvantaged and Retarded Children and worked with both the children and their families.

Benno Tiber, a senior from San Francisco, Calif., went to the Tyone Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., where he was a technical assistant.

One of the more unusual "Open Semester" projects last year was a group effort which took three months in Vermont with a faculty member, Dr. Drew Hyland of the philosophy department, and his family. The ten studied "Platonism and the Philosophy of Being" and a group and individually undertook separate projects. Three wrote, one studied Hemingway, two made a film concerning man and nature, another painted, one studied Nietzsche's philosophy and one traced man and nature through literature.

Upon return to the campus each student presented a show and was evaluated by the faculty adviser who had been with them. Besides the projects, the group "Open Semester" seminars provided the opportunity as Dr. Hyland put it, "not merely to tell the students but to show them that living reflectively is the best fun in the world."

The "Open Semester" can be hard work for faculty members. Some 21 faculty supervised the 37 students taking the option last year; in addition to their normal course load. "It requires extra hours," said one faculty member, "but it is well worth it to see a student find himself working at something in depth." Other faculty members have stated that they found the work of individual students undertaking "Open Semesters" to be superior to work done by the same students prior to the project.

A number of off-campus advisers, according to Dean Winslow, have submitted exceptionally fine comments concerning the work undertaken by Trinity students. Some of these off-campus advisers have sought the continuation of the students' work beyond the term of the "Open Semester" itself and the work of some of the students has been seen as sufficiently significant by the sponsoring institution to warrant remuneration.

Dean Winslow said he would welcome hearing from alumni of the "Open Semester" project suggestions and he would be pleased to have additional students who have been offered to students.

After one year, the "Open Semester" program seems to have lived up to the philosophy behind its creation as stated by the Curriculum Revision: "To provide an opportunity for students to develop skills and experiences, possibly to experience life outside the groves of academe, to sample the intellectual, cultural and social resources of another..."

Wrong's paper, "The Rhythm of American Politics," described the pattern of "alternating periods of protest and stabilization."

In democratic politics possessing universal suffrage and competing political parties experience a cyclical alternation of protest, retrenchment, and the Left with periods of conservative or Right retrenchment," Wrong said.

"The Department of Sociology, on leave from New York University, admitted that "to reveal a cyclical rhythm of right and Left phases is not really to say very much."

Wrong attributed this rhythm to an "inner logic" of democratic political systems. He explained that if the Left can form its own party and be adopted by an older party, then "some crisis such as economic depression, defeat in war, or a severe split in the party of Rights will give the Left the chance to win office."

"They are then able to carry out reforms and advances after successfully persuading a sizeable segment of the Left's one time following that a consuming phase of the program will not wipe out these gains," Wrong said.

"The Left has never achieved its full potential, he pointed out, and so has not attacked the Right and because even its followers cannot fully believe in a program they have never lived under,

Wrong said that the fact that the poor are far more numerous than the wealthy and tend to support the Left is counteracted by the Right's appeals to nationalism, he pointed out.

Wrong argued that since the Left will eventually control the country and since the return of conservatives is based on the fact they will not wipe out all the gains made against them, it is an "unmistakable "leftward drift" inherent in the functioning of democratic politics."

Unfortunately, difficulties with the financial system preceded this, and I cut short my contract to return to Trinity.

"My support at the Garfield was benefited from the efforts of many professional contacts. I learned many useful skills invaluable here at Trinity as well as valuable administrative experience virtually gained."

"My crystalized my wish to go into the professional theatre as a career. My only regret is that Trinity does not have a fully intergraded internship program, so that tight might have had the opportunity to follow up on other job offers.

"The Guthrie is a 1,400-seat thrust-stage theatre producing five plays per year on its main stage and ten more per year can be stage (100-seat productions). During the months of July, I was primarily occupied with removing the four existing communication systems, building new stage lighting positions, maintenance of stage lighting equipment and control systems, installation of new sound equipment and rebuilding the experimental theatre. During this issue, I perfected and installed a new piece of lighting control equipment which I plan to patent."

CLASSES

- The Class held the first of what is expected to be an annual reunion of its Fiftieth Reunion Dinner at the University Club in September 26 as a part of the new scholastic for holding such events in the fall. Members from Portland, Maine to New Orleans were present, many with their wives. Unfortunately two wives who had expected to attend were not able to do so. Still, there were 26 at the table in the Blue Room where the first "Fiftieth" Reunion was held. Those attending included: HAM BARBER, STAN LEKEE, HUBB PRESSED, HUBB SILVERBERG, EVE SKAU, SAM TRAUER, and DICK WYE. All felt it was a grand reunion of a very congenial group. Few tax kept the group amused with his large fund of droll stories all with a sharp point.

After the Reunion, the SKAU's left to attend a. meeting in Chicago. Eve is one of the top authorities on organic chemistry in the country.

DICK WYE moved to the west coast in September. HAM BARBER went to his home at Belleair Beach in Florida in October and then to Montreal, from New York, they visited Washington and Boston. The group did not walk up a single hill as they rode 10-speed English bikes. One of Ham's grand-daughters has just returned from Okaz, Japan, where she spent a year as an exchange student.

Trinity Eleven Voted New England Champions

Dave Kiarsis Elected Top Player in East

Post-season awards accumulated for the football team with the UPI's New England College Division Championship and later an announcement of Dave Kiarsis being selected "Player of the Year" in the East as the most coveted trophies.

Dick Dew, New England sports editor for United Press International, presented the team championship at an awards night in Hamlin Hall following the final week of ballotting in UPI's coaches' poll, which picked the Bantams number one in the college division ranks.

Kiarsis, who led the nation's college division runners with a per game average of 171.8 yards, was named "Player of the Year" in Division II by the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference, which includes 104 colleges and universities which participate in football.

Along with the Division II winner, Ed Marinaro of Cornell, and Eby Hollins of Edinboro State (Pa.), the Division III leader, will be honored at the E.C.A.C. annual dinner in New York City February 16.

Dave was also named to the All-E.C.A.C. team of the year and was selected to the All-New England Second Team. Defensive tackle Bill Belisle was an All-New England honorable mention.

At the awards night in Hamlin Hall, Kiarsis was given a standing ovation when he was presented with a special trophy in recognition of his national leadership in rushing. He ended the season with 1374 yards (Trinity and New England records) for the pace-setting average.

Co-Captain Jon Miller received the 1935 (MVP) Football Award and the senior guard was named the outstanding offensive lineman for Trin during the season. Tackle Bill Sartorelli received the outstanding defensive lineman award. The Jesse Blocking award was presented to offensive tackle Cliff Cutler.

Certificates of achievement for outstanding performances in specific games by election to the E.C.A.C. weekly team were presented to Kiarsis, quarterback Erich Wolters and sophomore defensive standout Ray Perkins.

Captains elect for the 1971 football team, by vote of the lettermen on the championship 1970 team, are starting guard Thomas Schable of Westfield, N.J. and defensive halfback Edward Hammond of New London.

Soccer Awards

In a separate awards session the soccer team saw centerhalfback Bayard Fiechter receive the Peter S. Fish (MVP) Soccer Trophy while sophomore halfback Donald Burt received the Harold R. Shetter (Most Improved) Trophy. The co-captains elect are Fiechter and Steven Hill.

Coed Managers

In another development Kathy F. Donahue was named varsity soccer manager for next season. She succeeds Duncan Salamon and is one of a number of coeds who are volunteering to take over these important tasks for the teams.

The squash team has Elizabeth Hunter as manager while her assistants are Erica Dummel and Karen Kahn.
