Higher Education Hit By Financial Crisis

Trinity finished the past fiscal year with an operating deficit of $320,472. In his annual report, College Treasurer J. Kenneth Robertson explains that he had to pay bills totaling $6,849,315 with cash income of $6,628,742, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1970.

However, the college is predicting that once again we are drawing closer to balance its budget, under the pressure of fiscal imbalances and constraints. (The outlook nationally and what Trinity is doing are hopeful signs in terms of a salutary experience.)

The gloomy outlook from other treasurers, Robertson views the future "with optimism."

He writes, "deficit confrontation is a traumatic experience," but "in some ways a salutary experience. It has forced us to reorder our priorities...to redesign the budgetary process, encourage cost control and to avoid waste."

He concluded "there are hopeful signs that once again we are drawing closer together as a community with shared ideals and with shared responsibilities."

The factors commonly mentioned are external inflation, internal inflation peculiar to education, a depressed stock market, social concerns that have increased expenses such as the need for financial aid, dwindling sources of income because of tight money or a disenchancement with changing life styles on campuses, and increasing demands by society for services from educational institutions.

Despite the gloomy outlook from other treasurers, Robertson views the future "with optimism."

There has been a deluge of reports since confirming Carnegie Commission Chairman Dr. Clark Kerr's conclusion that "higher education is facing the greatest financial crisis it has ever had."

A recent sampling:
- Sixteen teachers at Hiram Scott College (Neb.) have been fired in an economy move and intercollegiate athletics dropped.
- Perkins College in Beatrice, Neb. closed its doors in January and gave its 385 students two days notice to leave the campus which is up for sale.
- The Oregon State system of higher education will base tuition charges next fall on the cost of instruction.
- Columbia University projected a $15.5 million deficit for the current year and announced a five-year austerity program to balance the budget. The theater arts program will by phased out with the graduation of present major makers.
- Bradley University and the University of Buffalo are both dropping intercollegiate football.
- Yale University announced efforts to seek $30 million to finance a deferred tuition plan which would allow students a "tuition postponement option" of up to 35 years to pay swollen tuition rates.

The Association of American Colleges, after surveying 500 institutions concluded the average private college ran a small deficit in 1968-69. That deficit quintupled in 1969-70 and is expected to be even higher in 1970-71.

In actuality Trinity ran an $86,000 deficit in 1968-69 and a whopping $320,000 in 1969-70 for the year ending June 30, 1970. But Trinity officials are confident that 1970-71 (current fiscal year) will not see a deficit.

"His hands (Robert Leghorn '72) closed slowly around her neck (Miss Jane Howard '72) - a scream - and crash," and down he goes, writes Jay Schaefer '71 in introducing an in-depth look at voluntary physical education since requirements were dropped in 1969. (See page 7).

Confusion

My husband is an alumus of Trinity and we both have enjoyed reading your thoughtful article on the current climate of campus unrest. It seems so strange to me that a campus that I have always associated with a strong sense of community and tradition is now facing such a turbulent period. Is this a reflection of the changing times, or is it a result of the university’s failure to address the needs of its students? I wonder what the future holds for Trinity and its community.

Edith S. Comins
(wife of Harry Comins, MA ’20)

It is surprising that a “Hartford” firm is not better informed. Trinity has not merged, nor is it contemplating merger, with the University of Hartford. Perhaps the confusion can be traced to the cooperative interinstitutional programs designed to offer students a broader range of educational opportunities.

Koreans.

Here is the account of the endless days and nights alone in a shabby, cold room, hours of countless beatings, interrogation and forced continued confessions. The physical and mental torture, the anguish, the hunger, pain and torment suffered by this young officer and presumably by the other 81 surviving members of the Pueblo in the hands of the North Koreans. This is a moving and detailed report of treatment of prisoners and techniques of interrogation by an adversary which the Navy and all branches of the military for that matter would do well in presenting as a field manual or as a film in training of military men today. It is not an account of what might happen in the hands of an enemy; it is the frightful tale of what did happen.

There is also an inspiration in this account in seeing the crew regain its unity after a few months and find ways to defy their captors and even outwit them despite the peril in doing so.

The real tragedy of the Pueblo, and the worst torment of all for its crew, was not the inhuman treatment at the hands of the North Koreans but the official greeting they received when they returned home.

After a public welcome home and touching reunion with family and loved ones Christmas eve 1968, the men of the Pueblo were subjected to investigations, military inquiries and the endlessness of crimes against their own government. Then, without resolving any of the doubts it cast, the Navy dropped the matter. Once again each member of the Pueblo crew was alone.

“What right,” asks Wilson in his Epilogue, “has the Navy and the rest of the country to leave men like Schumacher unrepatriated spiritually?” This book was written to ask that question. Now it is time for the country to answer. The Pueblo men have already waited too long.”

In his senior year at Trinity, Skip Schumacher asked if he could list me as a reference on his application to Naval Officers Candidate School. He had served as a photographic student assistant in the News Bureau for two years. Subsequently I received a standard reference form from the U.S. Navy.

In the summary remarks section I pretended, “I believe Mr. Schumacher has the potential of becoming a fine officer and would be a credit to the Navy and our nation.” After reading “Bridge of No Return,” I have no doubts I did not put that line in all caps.

The young Lieutenant had decided suicide was “the only way out,” just three days after capture and twice he tried to carry out his decision by plunging his head in a bucket of water in his room, only to choke, cough and sputter his way back into the lonely, bleak, tormenting “life” that was to be his for the next year.

This is the account, as told to veteran journalist George Wilson, of one of the pawns in the gruesome cold war chess game played by the North Koreans after blatantly capturing a U.S. ship on the high seas.

While the capture of the Pueblo and the subsequent incarceration of its crew raises a number of sticky questions, including policy decisions at the highest levels and accountability of the Code of Conduct expected of military personnel, Skip’s book essentially concentrates, as best as he can remember, on those 11 other educational benefits from the project as well. Film rentals for a student taught course in film aesthetics are largely being underwritten by Cinestudio income. Free campus showings of classics in 16mm will also be provided. In time, it is planned to support filmmaking, to bring lecturers to campus, and to cooperate with the American Film Institute in Washington. Students participating in the project benefit most directly. Naturally, they get to see the movies free and they enjoy working together, but meanwhile they are learning about cinema management. They deal with distributors by phone, transport films, write publicity. The projectionists, in particular, benefit because they gain entry into a specific technical field through a system of apprenticeship leading to licensing. The enthusiasm of the students remains high and is self-generating as they develop a project that is achieving results.

Alumni Invited to Rome Campus

Alumni and their families planning to visit Rome this summer are welcome to attend classes on the Trinity/Rome Campus without charge.

The counseling service of Alumni Relations, in cooperation with Dr. Michael R. Campo, director of the Rome center, is offering a number of courses and activities. The Rome center, the College's second overseas center, was established in 1969 with the specific aim of offering an academic program to college students in Europe and the Mediterranean.

Courses offered will include business, mathematics, graphic design, art history, history, and classical studies. The program, scheduled for June 9 until July 29, will also include a week-long walking tour of several Italian cities.

FRED READ marked his 25th year with Home Life Insurance Company, New York, in December.

He is a member of the Massachusetts and New York Bars, has been general counsel of the company since 1964. He went with Home Life after service with the U.S. Navy in World War II as a legal officer where he attained the rank of captain. In 1954, he was named counsel and chief legal officer. Prior to his naval service, he had been engaged in the practice of law in New York City and had served as counsel to the French Air Commission and later to the British Air Commission.

Active in St. Stephen’s Episcopal Church in Port Washington, he also serves as a lay reader at St. Paul’s Chapel and Trinity Church, both near his office in Manhattan. He is a past president of the Port Washington Board of Education.

He is a member of the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association. He is past president of the Association of Life Insurance Counselors and a member of the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters.

Fred has shared various committee interests of the American Life Convention, the Life Insurance Association of America and the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

FRED and his wife, the former Enid Avery of Port Washington, are the parents of two children: Frederick W. Read II, as attorney with the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and Cynthia A. Read of Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

ANDY BROWN retiring board chairman of the American Institute of Bankers in New York, and President of the National Congress of Christians and Jews, presented with a citation plaque for his service to the organization. The presentation ceremony took place at the Bank of America head offices.

David C. Hewitt, chairman of the Greater Hartford Flood Control Commission, has been named as successor to the presidency of the five previous years he had been director of the Hartford Flood Control Project. Ted’s career from the coaching field is a heavy blow to the commission, since he was the source of good news nearly every autumn. During his 27 years as head football coach at Warrior, his teams won a school record of 31-14-1. Prior to that, he had spent 11 years as head coach at Matlident High School (Conn.), where his teams won 23 games and lost 14.

He is one of only two coaches in the area who was over 100 victories as a head coach at the high school level. Stating that this season was the first of his four teams were undefeated. Ted said that “I hate to give it up, but my new hours make coaching impossible. You can’t go on coaching forever.”

PHIL SMITH has opened offices as a private consulting engineer at 11 Asylum Street, Hartford, Conn. He will specialize in engineering problems involving water control. Phil brings wealth of experience to his new position. For the five previous years he had been director of the Greater Hartford Flood Control Commission, before that he had spent nearly 34 years with the Metropolitan District Commission. In both jobs, he dealt with water control and other hydraulic engineering problems. With the Great Hartford Flood Control Commission he was called solving engineering problems in the flood control project on the Park River and in demanding improved construction. Phil’s firm will also cooperate with the firm of Gorden L. Mayo Associates on some major projects.

For special projects the two firms will “form a problem-solving team which an owner and his design professionals could consult to avoid technical problems which might cause construction delays.”

PHYLLIS and her Secretary have had a most enjoyable three week stay in Baltimore in late November and early December. I had breakfast with Fred Behnke, who was expecting a brief tour of the Hartford School system. We also ate the Terry Towel ‘73 and the Peter Fiban ‘76. The latter live in a beautiful home in Warwick, part of which was built in 1640.

DOUG and Marlon RANKIN announce the marriage of their daughter, Jean, to Charles M. Rogers of Kansas City. Mo. on December 12. Nathaniel R. Hinsen has married Miss Sara C. Natinen in Foley, Sweden. Nat’s parents are her Secretary and Phyllis.

Dr. GEORGE GANE has left Westport, Conn., and may be addressed at 1050 Newport Ave., San Diego, Cal. 92107. May we hear your news, good or bad.

BILLY and Betty HARING report the arrival of their 12th child, Christopher, named after a total of five. The Harlings visited South Carolina, Georgia and Cape Cod during 1970, and were in South Carolina again this past February.

BILLY ONDERKIN has been elected treasurer of Trinity Church, Hartford. He is doing a splendid job for our College as 1971 Alumni Fund chairman.

The BILL MCCORNS are still looking forward to move to Connecticut — if they will sometime next spring, Washington, D.C. Our deepest sympathy to the family of Joe Flynn who died January 21 suddenly.

Voluntary Physical Education Thriving

by Jay L. Schaefer '71

His hands closed slowly around her neck, his eyes stared into hers: then a flood scream—"he-yah!—"and the small fragile freshman girl sent the big senior flying head over heels onto the mat.

The students were practicing judo in one of the new classes offered by the Physical Education Department. Other new courses now popular include karate, scuba diving, skiing, sailing and indoor tennis.

The former traditional group activities such as touch football, softball, basketball, soccer and volleyball have given way to student requests for "carry-over" courses that include extensive individual instruction, according to Professor Roy A. Dath, coordinator of the physical education program.

The change came two years ago with the faculty's adoption of the New Curriculum, which eliminated required courses and brought sweeping reform and new courses to many departments, but none more radical than the P.E. program.

The curriculum change came at the time the doors of the George M. Ferris Athletic Center were about to open.

The initial change eliminated the two-year physical education requirement Dath said, and allowed students voluntarily to take physical education courses for a maximum of one academic credit (four classes—or one for one credit and no limit on the number of activities without credit).

"People thought we might be lonely down here and that the change (eliminating requirements) might be the death-knell of our program," said Robert E. (Robbie) Shults, associate professor of P.E. "But that isn't happening. Students are coming down and we've offered new courses to keep them interested."

Dath said the response from the students—and especially the girls, who are in every class has been "tremendous.

Assistant Professor David Burns admits he met some resistance when he "kept a few chops ahead" of his students when course was first introduced. Now he teaches advanced techniques.

The program is a combination of activities found now at country clubs, health spas and tennis clubs, he said.

All of the coaches agreed that under the old system the courses were often filled with unwilling students. Now, they point out, there is a receptive attitude in the classes that makes the students easier to teach and their teachers more enthusiastic.

Each department member teaches physical education courses in addition to coaching intercollegiate sports (varsity and freshman athletics). "We wear a lot of hats," said instructor William P. Sferro, "but it is enjoyable, and the program is worthwhile." Sferro is an assistant football coach, freshman basketball coach, freshman lacrosse coach and teaches bowling, squash and urban recreation classes.

Several of the coaches had to brush up on the fundamentals of newly offered courses, Assistant Professor David R. Buran said he was "only a few chops ahead of the students" during his first karate classes, and Hamel went ahead and earned his brown belt in judo.

Robe Shults said students interested in team sports can work out with the varisty, play intramurals, or compete in pick-up games. Many students have organized continuing classes in fencing, sailing, karate and formed a gymnastics club to continue developing their new skills by themselves.

In addition to teaching beginning and survival swimming and Senor Life Saving, Assistant Professor Robert D. Slaughter works with water safety instructors who are eager to give individual swimming instruction as part of their physical education program. Now with classes in diving and scuba diving, Slaughter said, "The aquatics program offers everything except water skating.

Slaughter said the old required swimming program had kept the pool occupied most of the day. With the New Curriculum, the swimming pool, along with most of the other field house facilities, are available for greater recreational use during the day by students, faculty and alumni.

The Ferris Center opens at 7:00 a.m. with several students and faculty regularly playing indoor tennis or jogging around the indoor dirt track at that hour before going to class. Activities continue in the facilities until 10:00 p.m. The evenings usually reserved for recreational use.

There is a recreation program from 11:45 to 1:00 p.m. daily for alumni and faculty to enjoy basketball, squash, tennis, weight lifting and swimming. And there are other programs, such as "bubble babies swimming" for the pre-school children of faculty and staff of the College.

Another aspect of physical education stressed in the new program is coaching and teaching "urban recreation," a pilot course offered by Sferro, which will become a graduate lecture/lab seminar leading to further work in Hartford.

Medical self-help, a "first-aid-plus" course explains how to treat persons injured during blackouts or other emergencies.

Associate Professor Donald G. Miller, varsity football coach, offers a seminar in "coaching varsity football," designed for students interested in teaching or coaching. He also teaches squash and coach freshman baseball.

Dath said that in addition to new courses offered which include badminton, archery, recreational rowing, gymnastics and physical development (men only)—other courses will be added when students express an interest.

"But keep in mind," he said, "that hasn't happened. Students are coming down and we've offered new courses to keep them interested."

Professor Karl Kurth Jr., director of athletics, said he was happy with the increasing participation in the classes but that he was concerned under the voluntary participation, some students might leave college unable to swim, who never developed a skill in a carry-over activity, or who had no knowledge of the need for physical fitness.

"If I was assured the students had these abilities before coming to Trinity, I wouldn't be concerned," Kurth said.

Both Kurth and Dath said an increasing number of students are "auditing" physical education courses and participating in an activity without receiving academic credit.

The physical education program at Trinity is unusual, according to Dath as it offers a wide-range of courses (with textbooks and individual instruction) that are not required, but may be taken for academic credit. He said many other colleges were studying the program to see how Trinity combined voluntary physical education, a modern well-equipped athletic center and new courses to bring about spiraling enthusiasm among the students, faculty, coaches and alumni.

This year's senior class, however, will be the last to remember the days of the (all-male) required half-mile survival swim.

"Alright, men," the instructor used to say, "you're going to have to swim half a mile. Everyone into the pool." And 20 naked young men jumped into the water.

But no more. The new curriculum ended that memorable forced swim and education has prompted posting signs in the locker rooms today noting "Swim suits must be worn at all times."

Trinity is a testament of the dramatic changes that have swept the physical education department in the past two years. Wearing swimsuits also points to a new requirement issued by a department which is flourishing in the absence of old ones.
Greenblatt joins 1000-point club

How about Trinity as a 21-point favorite over Southern Cal in basketball? Would you believe TC by four over Rochester? Yes, when you say "yes" to the second question for that is what prompted the first query. It was posed by Hartford Courant sports writer Alan Greenblatt Joins four points course toppled after Trinity stunned favored Rochester by four points Saturday, the same team that toppled Force by ten. Air Force lost to Notre Dame by four but the Irish upset UCLA by seven. And UCLA of course toppled Southern Cal. by four. Think that one over. It's the Bantams by 21.

A Trinity team probably will never see a Southern Cal. or UCLA quiet on the basketball court but you can't blame Athletic Director Karl Korts if he tries with the idea. For the stiffer the pro of the schedule (2-4) and opening field the Bantams couldn't keep the lid on them.

Rochester has had its best season in 15 years, fell to the University of Connecticut, defeated in a freezing day in the Capital Center.

Unfortunately for Rochester it was畢竟 Greenblatt's teammates, like Howie Greenblatt with an average of 22 points a night. Greenblatt had only 11 points, but his usual all-around performance of the things he is supposed to do except center of attention. During a three-minute standing ovation which drowned out the public address announcer's attempts to explain the 1,000 point achievement to Rochester alumni present, Howie was presented with a ball by his Coach and his dad, Sol Greenblatt. It was only the fifth time a player has reached 1,000 career points at Trinity. And Howie is the first under six feet to receive the Gold Key. But the former

Moe Drabowsky '57 Accepts Gold Key By Praising Others

Veteran major league pitcher Moe Drabowsky '57, received a coveted Gold Key from the Connecticut Sportswriters Alliance at the group's annual mid-winter awards dinner.

Drabowsky, who leaped from the Trinity diamond right to the major leagues, didn't throw any curve in receiving the Gold Key. But the former relief hurler for the World Champion Baltimore Orioles (he is now with the St. Louis Cardinals) did present a touching change up when he accepted the honor not for himself but on behalf of five people who had the most to do with his success - his mother and father, Ralph Erickson, his coach at Loomas School; the late Dan Jesee, his teacher at Trinity; and his wife, Liz Drabowsky.

Drabowsky was so sincere in paying tribute to others that he promised long-time Hartford Courant Sports Editor Bill Lee to write the next day "The way Moe put it into words it didn't come off the least bit corny. In the end, he just about made the award a memorial to Jesee."

Despite his efforts to pitch the praises of others it was Drabowsky's Gold Key for distinguished service to sports by a New Haven native that got the most attention. He is the fourth Trinity man so honored by the Connecticut Sportswriters Alliance. Citizens in previous years were Ken Smith '25, the director of the Baseball Hall of Fame at Cooperstown, N.Y.; Ray Ooting, professor of physical education, emeritus; and the late Dan Jesee.
