Annual Report Examines The Future

In an unusual and revealing Annual Report this year, President Lockwood outlines with charts and statistics the kinds of academic and financial pressures facing Trinity and other independent colleges today.

Issued as a background paper to help Trinity in its future planning, the 1973 Annual Report reviews the kinds of trends which have influenced Trinity and other schools, and makes projections based on "reasonable expectations for the balance of this decade."

Commenting on the report, Dr. Lockwood said "It is time now, while Trinity is on a firm financial ground, to talk about where we wish the College to be academically in 10 years. Such a discussion involves an understanding of what's happening in admissions, financial aid, faculty salaries and library space, items which could affect our commitment to attract a truly diverse student body. From this discussion we can begin to sort out our priorities."

Trinity, he predicts, will need to increase its endowment substantially over the next 10 years if it is to continue to compete with the best liberal arts institutions.

Among his projections are that the College may need:

- New endowment funds for scholarships. Scholarship "endowment currently totals $3.2 million, income from which is supplemented by money taken from annual operating funds. Market value of Trinity's total endowment funds is approximately $31 million.
- Endowment to provide at least one endowed professorship in each department, helping the College bring faculty compensation "to a truly competitive level." Endowed professorships and other instructional endowment now totals about $4 million.
- More endowed funds to cover projected increases in Library expenses. Current Library endowments total about $925,000.
- Funds for physical improvements to the Library.

Panelists Share Views of Trinity

"Virtually none of Trinity's freshman class expect to be in the bottom two-fifths of their graduating class." This kind of optimism, revealed in a survey of freshmen made by Trinity's department of sociology, was among the information told to some 400 parents and guests during a Parents Weekend panel discussion October 27.

Whether or not the students can meet that goal — a statistical impossibility — remains to be seen, but according to Dr. Norren Dulz, assistant professor of sociology, Trinity's freshmen do come to the College with high expectations of success.

She was one of the six people who participated in the panel which considered the topic "After 150 Years, What is a Trinity Education?"

"We want to produce people who have opinions about issues," he said.

William L. Rafferty '74 who spent last year on leave of absence at Halle Selassi University in Ethiopia, said it was important to him that Trinity is "receptive to student programs which haven't been tried before." He said his experience in Ethiopia made him aware of educational opportunities at Trinity — such as involvement in community and social affairs — which are taken for granted here, but not available in foreign schools.

In addition to her comments about the freshmen, Dr. Dulz discussed curricula, saying that Trinity could expect more changes in this area. Among (continued on page 2) the current questions, she said, are whether the College should maintain a quota of 1,000 men; how the number and role of women faculty can be improved, and the questions — "many of them unanswered by some faculty, administrators and parents" — about the expectations of women students regarding their roles and professional development.

Peter Bausch ’74 argued that most learning "occurs outside the classroom," and said that a student "goes to college to grow." In the areas outside the classroom, he said, students come to terms with themselves, re-evaluate the parent-child relations, understand themselves sexually and emotionally, and learn to relate themselves to the world at large. If learning also occurs in the classroom, he quipped, "it’s a valuable by-product."

This view was disputed by Robin Landy ’75, who transferred to Trinity. She said that there is a necessity for students to understand why it is they want to take particular courses, whether it's to satisfy a requirement, to "check off something you wanted to learn in your lifetime," even if it's of no immediate use, or to follow a particular professor who can, for example, "make public administration have a spirit of excitement."

She said she feels the smallness of Trinity is worth the price of the tuition, and said she finds Trinity's teachers have "a profound desire to instruct." The classroom, she argued, "is still a viable springboard for the greater world of education."

Dr. John A. Gettyer, associate professor of religion and chairman of the department, observed that in the College’s 150 years, the changes which have taken place in the past five have been the most significant. He pointed to the new departments which have been added to the faculty, the Rome Campus, and the "flexibility" of the new curriculum. Three important aspects of the new curriculum, he said, were the elimination of all requirements except those in the major, the institution of Freshman Seminars "which introduce students to the academic life of this College," and the chance for independent study. Two important thrusts of the curriculum, he said, were that students assume more responsibility for determining their education, and the faculty's commitment "to provide time and advice to help in the exercise of that responsibility."

Water Polo In Tourney

October 26 and 27 the Trinity College Water Polo Team competed in a round robin tournament at Brown University. Trinity with a (4-3) season was chosen along with Southern Connecticut State College to represent the Southern New England Conference of Division II against Boston College and Bowdoin of the Northern Conference. Trinity lost each of its three matches by only one goal: B.C. 5-6, S. Conn. 5-4, and Bowdoin 5-4 in double overtime. The Bantams finished fourth in Division II, seventh overall in New England among schools from Division I and II and with five men on the tournament all-star team.

Bill Brown ’76 and Dave Teichman ’77 both made the first team with Greg Shen ’76, Ted Steffe ’74 and Jim Brudt ’77 all honorable mention. No other team in either division had as many men honored.

The scholarship has been awarded annually to an outstanding chemistry student since 1961, and has been given in memory of Dr. Kriebel since his death in 1964.

Halloween Hoop

On November 1 at 12:15 a.m. the varsity basketball team held its first practice under NESCA conference rules. The basketball team, cheerleaders and band, along with SACA food service manager, David Meyers, sponsored a Halloween party in Ferris with cider and doughnuts, compliments of SACA. Six hundred people watched the midnight inter-squad scrimmage.

stance on aid to education. Others are student expectations, public interest in higher education, and the general economy. Dramatic trends in these areas would naturally bring about changes in our planning. The ideas contained in this Report are based on what we can observe at the moment.

National trends, he says, indicate that independent colleges are "unlikely to experience enrollment growth of any significance in the near future," and that "the demand for higher education, in which we have become accustomed, may not persist." These trends and Trinity's recent experience, he says, indicate the College "faces an increasing challenge in attracting and enrolling qualified applicants.

Competiton from public colleges and universities, "and from those schools with which Trinity traditionally vies for the exceptional student" will continue to grow, Dr. Lockwood says. Moreover, "fiscal constraints may limit financial aid, thereby discouraging many scholarship candidates from applying and many not-accepted applicants from enrolling.

Financial aid is also important because it was Americans' commitment to open our colleges and universities to all qualified candidates regardless of their ability to pay.

This commitment, Dr. Lockwood reports, "has put an unavoidable strain on Trinity's finances, an experience 'illustartive of prevailing trends nationally among private institutions.' During the last three years, he says, the College had to reduce the amount of money taken from current operating funds for scholarships. In 1969-69, some $5 million to offset inflation and provide help for transfer students, who currently receive little aid. This amounts to a total of $275,831 was raised.

The Trinity Freshman Football team is undefeated (as of this writing) with a season record of 4-0. The Baby Bantams have been victorious in their last eighteen outings. They have defeated WPI, 25-7; Springfield College, 18-14; Coast Guard Academy, 46-14; and Wesleyan, 28-6. Against WPI October 8, Robert O'Leary (6-0, 175), a defensive back, took an interception 87 yards for the game-winning score. After this Roger LaCharite (3-4, 165) at halfback scored two touchdowns. Fullback Patrick Heffernan (6-3, 218) rushed for 161 yards on 31 carries. Overall the Baby Bantams had 397 yards rushing and 28 in the air.

October 19 against Springfield, Heffernan had 119 yards on 32 carries. Primarily a defensive battle, with co-captain lineman Mike Lenox (6-0, 185) and end Jon Thompson (6-0, 210) as standouts, Springfield's running game was limited to negative yards, while the secondary picked off three interceptions. Both Donald Daugne (5-10, 185) and Dan Iadonisi (5-11, 170) grabbed Springfield passes.

Twice the Bants caught the Springfield quarterback in his own end zone for safeties; once by Charles Reiss (5-11, 185), middle guard and again by David Tracey Wilson '76 and Mimi Coolidge '76, last until the championship game on Saturday. Coast Guard's fine running offense was held to only 118 yards. The Bantams total offense was 286 yards to the Cadets 215.

The Baby Bantams therefore had a concentrated season of ten matches in one month. Both doubles teams, Vicky Dainat and Mimi Coolidge '76, and Tracey Wilson '77 and Karen Skarinka '75, were seniors. The Women's Tennis Team finished its 1973 season with six wins and four losses. For the first time all the women's tennis was scheduled in the fall rather than a split fall-spring dual season. The Lady Bantams therefore had a concentrated season of ten matches in one month. Trinity lost its first three matches to Yale 5-4, Williams 6-3, and Brown 5-4, all very closely fought. The Bantams then rallied to win their next four against Smith 6-3, Bridget 5-0, Hat. Holyoke 6-3, and Conn. College 5-4. They then played Bates 6-3, Colby 7-4, and Wesleyan 6-3, and came back to win their last two, defeating U. Conn. 5-4 and Wesleyan 6-3. In their last two matches, Trinity's winning streak was stopped by Eric Dempell '74 and Leslie Hyde '76, represented Trinity in the New Englands at Yale October 19 and 20. Each was eliminated in the third round of six matches. Both doubles teams, Vicky Dainat and Mimi Coolidge '76, and Tracey Wilson '77 and Karen Skarinka '75, were seniors. With eleven women returning in the fall Coach Millspaugh is pleased with next season's prospects.

The Varsity Soccer Team is now 2-6 having defeated Union 2-1 and Coast Guard 4-1 in their last two games. For the fall season, senior attackers Robert Coolidge '78 and November 10 and Wesleyan, November 14 to finish the season.
