Beati, Sullivan Capture Top SGA Positions

by Marilyn Weiss

Running on the platform of greater student involvement at Trinity, senior biology major Todd Beati was elected president of the SGA last Thursday with a total of 368 votes. Advocating the importance of the students to be involved in academic and social policies, Todd stresses the importance of successful communication within the Trinity environment. By keeping the majority in contact with the SGA and its policies, Todd will strive to accomplish the mission.

Beati’s strong interest in student government is supplemented by his background in student government as a freshman when he served as dormitory representative and as a member of the Admissions and Financial Aid Committee, and new Vice-President Timothy Harashin’s Committee. During the 1981-82 term he was chairman of the Junior Class Committee.

He is currently a member of the Lowell, Massachusetts City Committee and in May, 1982, served as a delegate at the Massachusetts State Convention in Springfield.

Ted Hartsoe came in second in the race for the presidency with 266 votes. Third place went to Leif Pelligrin with 231 votes. Ben Howe captured fourth place with a total of 115 votes. Fifth place went to Tina Trlaiwich with 90 votes, and Peter O’Brien came in sixth with 79 votes.

Senior Chris Sullivan, elected vice-president, is far from unfamiliar with the position to which he has been chosen. Sullivan first became interested in student government as a freshman when he served as dormitory representative and as a member of the Admissions and Financial Aid Committee. He is now a member of the senior-sophomore year he worked diligently with fellow SGA representative and is currently working to put together the Sullivan-Leaming amendment to the SGA constitution which would involve each member of the at-large student body the opportunity to elect the president and vice-president of the school. In 1981, Sullivan was the only student president of the SGA and contributed to the organization of Trinity’s first Awareness Week.

Chris feels that his knowledge of academic and social resources has enabled him to bridge the gap between Trinity and the surrounding Hartford community. His concerns extend beyond the Trinity campus.

Pickering Deemed Resident Executive

by Amy Johnson

This year’s Resident Executive, Trinity is hosting a “Business Executive in Residence,” Joseph R. Pickering, The Economics Department, led by Professor Gerald Gronderson, has been bringing since 1967, a representative of the corporate world to Trinity.

The “Business Executive in Residence” program was first established in 1973 by the American Council of Life Insurance in order to increase the ties between the business world and liberal arts colleges. At that time, the council felt that it is important for students to be familiar with the business world. This goal has not left its mission.

In one letter, Cole tells Wadsworth of plans to paint a picture of the Garden of Eden, and an accompanying picture of the triumph of Adam and Eve from the Garden, which is now in the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. The Garden of Eden picture is now lost, but Cole’s letter details what he planned to show in the picture.

The letters also explain some details in Cole’s paintings which apparently puzzled his patron. The yellow streaks shown on a mountain side, Cole explained, mustades, and the water in the cart tracks meant that a storm had just passed.

The letters reveal that Cole’s relationship with Wadsworth was far different from the one he had with his other principal patron in the 1820’s, Robert Gilmer, Jr., of Baltimore. Gilmer, though generous, was a demanding patron, arguing about the price of a picture and urging Cole to paint after European models, even suggesting the angle from which a scene should be painted. Cole met Gilmer only three of four times.

The Cole-Gilmor correspondence relationship is one in which the letters was close and warm. Wadsworth, who was a generous, but also a demanding patron, was a supporter of Cole’s. The TRINITY TRIPOD
Vol. XXXII, Issue 2
September 21, 1982

The TRINITY TRIPOD is published weekly on Tuesday, except vacations, during the academic year. Student subscriptions are free upon request, however, the student activities fee; $40.00 per year. Student subscriptions are free upon request, however, the student activities fee; $40.00 per year. Advertising rates are $30.00 per column inch $30.00 per eighth page $50.00 per quarter page.
Trinity students will have an opportunity to meet an insurance executive, Malette Smith, Box 378. Other events are open to the entire community.

Terry Kimber. All events advertised in the Student Coalition of Blacks in Business are covered by SSTC/WTRC. Bob was raised in the local area and will talk with Trinity students interested in management careers.

Bevery Ravalese, one of many Trinity students who knew Bob, had this to say about him. "During his two years at Trinity College, Bob not only displayed his physical talent as a strong member of the varsity lacrosse team, but also showed the strong qualities of honesty, modesty, and sincerity; qualities which made him an outstanding man and a truly and admirable friend. Bob captured the affection and respect of all who knew him. We have lost a very dear and precious friend, and his presence in our lives will be greatly missed; but the fond memories that we have of Bob Falk will forever echo through our hearts."

Robert Alan Falk, Class of 1984, at West Hartford, died July 7, 1982 of injuries sustained in a head-on collision on route 156 in Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Bob was holding home to West Hartford after a day at the Waterside Ocean Beach in Old Lyme with his best friend Richard C. Buckley, III, when the driver of a pick-up truck crossed the double-yellow line on a blind curve and collided head on with the car driven by Falk. The accident occurred about 6 p.m.

Bob was a 1980 graduate of Kingswood-Oxford School, where he played football and lacrosse and wrote for the West Hartford News. At Trinity he earned varsity letters in lacrosse in both his freshman and sophomore years, won spots for the Triad and covered sports for WRTC. Bob also worked for the SAGA food service and was on the staff of the Trinity All Sports Camp last year.

It is expected that he will become a lawyer and has planned to study law at the London School of Economics.

Beverly Ravalese, one of many Trinity students who knew Bob, had this to say about him. "During his two years at Trinity College, Bob not only displayed his physical talent as a strong member of the varsity lacrosse team, but also showed the strong qualities of honesty, modesty, and sincerity; qualities which made him an outstanding man and a truly and admirable friend. Robert Alan Falk, Class of 1984

While at Trinity, Pickering will present three workshops. The first workshop, covering professional careers in insurance, will take place on September 27th. The second, entitled "Being at the Top: A Business Executive in an Ever Changing World," will be presented on September 28th and October 4th respectively. The "Executive in Residence" will also meet with various insurance representatives and economic educators in the local area and will talk with Trinity students interested in management careers.

At the same time that he is educating the Trinity community about his field, Pickering plans to educate himself about various liberal arts topics. He will attend classes ranging from American Economic History to 18th Century English History. He plans on attending a Bible studies and a philosophy course as well.

New TCB/WTRC Positions Filled

The Trinity Coalition of Blacks and its Women's Organization have filled their administrative positions. Presidents are Russell Hall and Tia Searles; vice-Presidents are Joan Jaboun and Tracy Kinbey. All events advertised through the print shop or the Tripod are open to the entire community. For information on upcoming events, contact Carma Carter, Box 378. Other correspondences should be sent to Box 1358.

Professor Edward W. Said, Parr Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University, and a well-known expert on Arab studies, will speak on "The Idea of Palestine: Vision, Conflict and Reconciliation" at Trinity College, Wednesday, September 22 at 8:00 p.m. in Goodwin Theatre. The event is the Michael P. Geulin Lecture in Religion, established in 1969 in memory of Michael P. Geulin, the first Trinity alumnus to be killed in action in Vietnam. Admission is free, and the public is invited to attend.

Said, who was born in Jerusalem, is a distinguished literary scholar as well as an expert on Arab studies. He is the author of seven books, including Orientalism (1978), The Question of Palestine (1979) and Covering Islam: How the Media and the Experts Determine How We See the Rest of the World (1981). His writings have appeared in nine languages. He has been visiting professor at several teaching American universities, including Columbia University, Johns Hopkins University, as well as the American University of Cairo, and the editor of Arab Studies Quarterly and a member of the editorial board of some fifteen literary and philosophical periodicals in the U.S., Europe, and the Middle East. Recently, he became the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Institute of Arab Studies.

Pledge Arrested

Generally informed College sources report that during the weekend of September 11 and 12, a Phi U pledge allegedy evidenced the Bradford Professor of English in English, CT, stood in front of the student body and yelled a vulgarity. Apparently, the pledge was arrested by the Enfield police. Tom Clemensson, one of Bob’s roommates, said this about Bob, “Bob was a rare friend in a world which is becoming more and more selfish. Bob was the type of person for whom giving all that he possibly could give. There were many days when Bob used his unique gifts of warmth and care to lift me out of a depression that I had fallen into. It was very rare that you found Bobby Falk without a smiling face and a twinkle in his eye. I am proud to say that I was a friend of Bobby Falk. He was a kid who entered Trinity as a shy, quiet, but grew into an outspoken, friendly kid who was always ready to help and be a true and admirable friend. As a true and a team member, on the lacrosse team, I will never forget Bob Falk and all of the joy that he brought into this world. In the short but wonderful time that I knew him, I have learned so much, and the many happy times that we shared together are times I will forever cherish.”

Bob was surpised by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard R. Falk, his brother Frank and Andrew, his paternal grandmother, Eva Falk of West Hartford, CT, and his maternal grandmother, Martha Voss of New York City.

The Triad and its Women’s Organization, the Teacher’s College Board of Trustees, and the Board of Directors, have asked that all contributions to the Bob Falk Memorial Fund be sent to Kingswood-Oxford School.

From 'Circular Insanity' to 'Invisible Government': Crowd Psychology in America, 1898-1928

In 1938 the psychotherapist Boris Sidis, the first analyst of American crowd behavior, warned that the United States "seems to suffer from circular insanity." In 1938 the political relations counselor E. L. Bornay called the manipulators of crowd behavior "an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country." Between these governments lay discoveries and distrusts that gave "crowd psychology"—irrational collective psychology—a swelling role in advertising, communications, and politics. The lecture will survey these developments and analyze their roots in hypnotic theory, the new social sciences, and the ideology of corporate liberalism.

North vs. South: The Fight Over Federal Aid to the Cities

The North and South are at war again, this time over federal funds. The conflict has emerged gradually in Congress over the past 20 years as the political and economic implications of the southward shift of the population has become clear. The shape of the conflict, however, is rather unexpected: as the Sunbelt has become more urbanized, its representatives have become less supportive of most types of federal aid to cities. An exploration of the reasons for this paradox involves questions of both ideology and political power.

Madness and Ability

Madness in the last century has been recast as a mental disease, though some forms of it seem symptomatic of physical (perhaps neurological) disease processes. But if madness is to be thought of as a mental malady, what about it is mental, and what a malady? Is it perhaps the loss of an energy to act in certain ways, to think in certain ways, to feel in certain ways, when no evidence suggests any physical deficiency?

All Lectures take place at 4:00 p.m. in the Faculty Club.

The Watkinson Library was founded in 1857 under the provisions of the will of David Watkinson, who wanted the city of Hartford to have a "Library of Reference," accessible to all Connecticut citizens. In 1866 the Library opened in the Wadsworth Atheneum. Under the direction of many eminent scholars, such as James Hammond Trumbull, late Secretary of the State for Connecticut during the Civil War, the Library expanded from 12,000 volumes in 1866 to 130,000 volumes in 1914.

During the 1930s, problems with the building (which the Library shared with the Hartford Public Library and the Connecticut Historical Society) and the financial problem of maintaining and adding to the collection forced the lack for new lodgings. After World War Two, when Trinity College was taking steps to enlarge its own Library, the boards of the two institutions decided to merge after approval by the boards of the two institutions and assurance of building funds by the Old Dominion Foundation. Full possession of the Watkinson Library was granted to Trinity College, while the Library remained as a separate, non-circulating collection of the College Library. In 1979, the Watkinson Library moved into enlarged quarters in the addition to the Trinity College Library.

The Watkinson Library was one of the first public libraries to be founded in the United States. It has been a leader in the development of public libraries and has played an important role in the education and cultural life of the city of Hartford and the state of Connecticut.

Students Reveal Knowledge Gained From Foreign Study

by Dave Bayliss

Robbin Winslow, Coordinator of Foreign Study Advising, has said that the most accurate source of information about foreign study are the foreign study students themselves. So, for those considering a semester abroad, the Tripped offers the following additions to a survey of recent foreign study students, all of whom spent last year abroad.

Questions: What was the greatest learning experience you had while studying abroad?

Don Jackson, '83 - London, via the INSTEP program, spring semester: "I got a totally different view of the world and the course of the world. In general, Americans seem to be more optimistic, whereas Europeans, having had the worst of two world wars, are skeptical about the future. They aren't as short-sighted. They have a more critical view of life. They've seen what evil man is capable of doing. Europeans are more open about alternative ideas like Marxism."

Steve Fiske, '83 - Florence, Italy, via Syracuse University, fall semester: "I learned a lot by living with an Italian family. Through the contrasts of culture, I was better able to learn about myself, the American lifestyle and the Italian culture."

Phoebe Dahlinquist, '83 - Aberdeen, Scotland, via Beaver College, fall semester: "I guess the greatest learning experience was just acting as other people live in other countries. Seeing how their lifestyle, values and standard of living are different from over here. Being abroad makes you take a closer look at the things you've always taken for granted."

Tina Tricarichi, '83 - University of East Anglia, England, via Beaver College, spring semester: "I learned the most through full integration with the British people in my learning environment as well as my extra-curricular environment. Being an American Studies major, having British professors with British students and reading from American History books written by British authors gave me a substantially different view of American history."

Steve Toll, '84 - University of East Anglia, England, via Trinity College Exchange Program, spring semester: "The greatest learning experience for me was being immersed in the culture - learning about English society through the students and people I met in the pubs and on the buses and such. It was a wonderful experience in that way. UEA was great in that you lived with the English students; there were few American students. It was challenging - travelling great distances by yourself, being in new situations. I got to learn a lot about myself. There was a wonderful sort of personal growth and self-evaluation."

Jane Moody, '83 - University of Montpellier, France, via Davidson College, full year: "Traveling was the greatest learning experience I had. Having the chance to travel whenever I wanted gave me an incredible sense of independence. I also learned a lot about the culture through teaching elementary English to French children."

Women's Center Offers Lectures, Films, and Support

by Julie Masters

"Knowledge is your best ammunition," says Kirsten Hartz, co-coordinator of the Trinity Women's Organization. That's the purpose of the Women's Center, to educate the community about issues concerning women. The Women's Center helps promote a new awareness among women and men at Trinity by initiating discussions. These discussions and the questions that are brought up at them, are the first step in obtaining changes needed by women. The members of the women's organizations are only too aware that certain transitions must be made in society to adjust for modern women.

The Women's Center, coordinated by Pat Miller is a room on the third floor of Mather and also a collective name for the organizations. There are two women's organizations within the Women's Center: the Trinity Women's Organization and the Coordinating Committee. The Coordinating Committee, composed of faculty and student women, acts as an administrative group directing the policies of the Women's Center. It represents Trinity women to the college administration and also acts as a liaison between the faculty and students. The Coordinating Committee meets bi-monthly to respond to any of the concerns of women on campus. Last year, the Coordinating Committee, along with the T.W.O., initiated protests among women against the administration's lethargy in establishing a Women's Studies Department.

The T.W.O. is a student-run organization funded through the S.G.A. The T.W.O. does have separate activities from the Coordinating Committee but also cooperates with its main activities. The T.W.O. is self-defined and not reliant on the college administration for support. This independence enables members to determine what they feel are important issues and take whatever action they feel is appropriate. The organizational structure is on a more horizontal level which encourages equal participation of all members. As a result of this relaxed attitude, new members are able to become active participants very easily.

The Women's Center has not always been as active as it is now. Although it was founded in 1970, it has only been since last year that it has become more energetic. In the past, prospective members have been discouraged by the stereotypes and misconceptions attached to women's organizations. Members have been labelled as "feminists" without an accurate definition of the word. A feminist is not a "man hating" radical who stages bra-burning rallies whenever possible. A feminist, according to Janet Radcliffe Richards, author of The Sceptical Feminist, is a person who feels that "women suffer from systematic social injustice because of their sex". Although misconceptions are hard to dispel, members of T.W.O. sense a spirit of change. An interest is developing to find out more about the history of women and their changing role in society.

One important question faced by the Women's Center in particular is whether to encourage men to attend their various meetings. Although all men are welcome to any activity sponsored by the women's organizations, there is a question as to whether men should be allowed to attend the weekly discussions. One argument maintains that in order to educate the community, the Women's Center must also educate the men. Women need to express their needs and concerns openly to men for them to gain a better perspective of women's positions. On the other hand, the discussion provide a rare opportunity for women to meet with each other to discuss problems and suggest answers without feeling restricted by the presence of men.

A psychological insight is offered by Carol Baatz, a staff member of the Women's Center, as to why some women want the Center opened to men. One is homophobia. Women want to dispel the misconception that all members of the Women's Center are lesbians. Women also feel a subconscious need to seek the approval of men. All members of the Women's Center want to hear the perspective of men so a compromise will be reached. Such a compromise will be alterative women's meetings opened to men.

Many of us have noticed little brown bags on the bulletin boards of Mather. They advertise the lunch series of lectures sponsored by the Women's Center. The lunch series provides a time for prospective members to have an informal discussion with her colleagues and students. Usually the guest speaker presents a topic which concerns her. Last Tuesday Joan Hedrick discussed her desire to do research on Harriet Beecher Stowe, most noted for the classic Uncle Tom's Cabin but also wrote many other books. This Tuesday Deborah Bergstrand will talk about 'Math Anxiety'.

On September 21st, 1982, the Trinity TriPod will begin the Friday film series. Each Friday the Women's Center will sponsor a film concerning women in all walks of life. The films touch upon the lives of women in the army, black women, Asian women, women during World War II and others. Each film lasts approximately an hour and is shown at 7 pm and 9 pm. This Friday's 'Role of the Riveter' will be shown. Complete listings are available in the Women's Center. Donations are gladly accepted.

Outreach Group Touches Many Lives in Hartford

by Dave Diamond

If roughly a quarter of a city can be pointed in the general direction of the Trinity community, it is certainly not for a lack of worldwide organizations that exist here. One of these is the Community Outreach Group, now in its second year and scheduled to commence operations this week. Founded by Ruth Watson, class of 1982, the group is now under the stewardship of John Bonelli, class of 1983, who looks forward to an expanded range of activities this year.

The Outreach Group plans to get involved in four projects. A carry-over from last year is its liaison with the St. Elizabeth House where the group provides meals for people who virtually could not eat otherwise. Described as a "living community for low income persons," St. Elizabeth's is located in downtown Hartford and accommodates some of the chronically homeless. Trinity students who serve meals two Sundays a month and provide entertainment and games designed to foster interpersonal relationships between students and residents. Said one student concerning participation in the group, "After you adjust to the impersonalized conditions it's a real worthwhile experience. You really feel useful."

The Transitional Living Facility is a second target for Outreach. This state run institution caters to the mentally retarded persons between 19 and 34 and is located on Clifford St. Participation dates are not set as yet, though plans should firm up by the meeting on Wednesday.

The same type of activities are being planned for the elderly through work with the Weekend Elderly Service Program. With the help of Trinity students, Scott Weaver, class of 1985, and chairman of W.E.S.P., hopes to provide entertainment and meals for the elderly. Ambitious if not overzealous, Bonelli fully expects these plans to be formalized and implemented in coming weeks. The first meeting of the group will be on Wednesday at 5:15 p.m. in Wean lounge. Interested students should attend the meeting or contact John Bonelli some time this week.

Trinity students had an opportunity last Thursday morning to learn more about the political scene in Hartford. The Political Science Department sponsors a program, known as the "Breakfast Round Table," which brings politicians, and, in the future, business and judicial leaders, to breakfast at Mudher Hall in order to meet with students. Last week Tony Palermo, the Democratic candidate for the fifth district seat in the Connecticut General Assembly, was at Trinity to talk to students about his campaign, and pro- posed some Black macros. He also talked to students about his views on the future of Hartford as a city.

"There is a strong possibility that the city will become a major hub for economic and social development," Palermo said. "We need to work together to make Hartford a more attractive place for people to live and work." He added that "the city's problems are not insurmountable, but they do require a concerted effort from everyone." He also discussed the need for increased public transportation and affordable housing.

"We need to focus on creating jobs and opportunities for our residents," he said. "This is essential for the long-term success of our city." He also talked about the importance of education and the need for better support for our schools. "We need to ensure that our children have the best possible education," he said. "This is essential for their future success." He concluded by thanking the students for their time and attention.

Hartford Justice Institute Relocates To Trinity Campus

by Margaret M. Figueroa

At 190 New Britain Avenue stands a building whose function has been a mystery to the Trinity community. Some sources believe it to be the future site of student housing, while others are unsure. However, as of July 1982, this location has a new purpose:

It was in early July that the building was officially occupied by the Hartford Institute of Criminal and Social Justice, formerly known as the Connecticut Historical Society. The institute had sold the building to the Hartford Institute of Criminal and Social Justice, and the transaction was scheduled for July 1982, this location has a new purpose:

"This building will be used to store and display the contents of the Institute," said Palermo. "We believe that it is important to preserve these materials for future generations." He added that "the Institute will continue to develop new exhibits and programs to engage and educate the public." Palermo also discussed the importance of preserving the history of Hartford and the state of Connecticut.

In the course of his speech, Palermo touched on the major concerns of the district. He believes that housing and land use are major issues in Hartford, and he hopes to work with local officials to improve the situation. He also talked about the need for better access to the Trinity campus and the need for more public transportation options.

The new arrangement will save the Institute the cost of maintaining the building, while providing a valuable resource for the community. The Institute will continue to develop new exhibits and programs to engage and educate the public. The Institute's mission is to promote the understanding of the history of Hartford and the state of Connecticut.

Although the city of Hartford has made great strides in rebuilding its downtown area in recent years, it also seems that those in the halls of the municipal organizations such as the United way, some insurance companies, and occasionally receives grants from local foundations. It also generates its own revenue through fees and donations. Although HART's Board of Directors are all volunteers, the organization employs a small staff of "organizers" who are paid for their services. These staff members are responsible for arranging and conducting the coalition's meetings, as well as researching and publicizing current issues of interest to the community involved.

In order to determine the problems faced by the community and the actions needed to be taken to alleviate these problems, HART has established a structure that begins at the grass-roots level. A group of HART members is responsible for each of the five neighborhoods that encompasses the coalition. These staff members go door-to-door in their respective areas to find out what the people want. Once it is established which problems are foremost in residents' minds, HART sets up meetings with neighborhood leaders and the leaders of other organizations that could help alleviate the problems.

The problems HART is trying to help alleviate within Hartford reflect the problems faced by the nation as a whole: crime, housing, high taxes (particularly property taxes), and unemployment. David McKinley, director of HART, feels that the corporate community is not doing its share to help Hartford's neighborhoods. McKinley feels that the corporate community should accept responsibility for helping fund low-income housing instead of, or in addition to, the extravagant housing presently funded by local corporations. As a result of one recent HART project, Aetna will probably provide money for a low-income housing project, although a final agreement has not been reached. Another case situation that McKinley feels strongly about is that most corporations do not train local people to fill jobs. Instead, they tend to employ people from outside the city, thus contributing many of the problems faced by city residents.

Despite occasional setbacks such as the one suffered by Hartford neighborhoods when the Connecticut General Assembly voted to terminate Hartford's property tax differential last spring. McKinley feels that his organization is not involved in the city's strategies in any meaningful manner. HART's strong support of local residents. As one HART member put it, "people working in unison can conquer." Although it may not always be a conquering force, the power of HART to influence decisions in Hartford city politics seems to be far-reaching.

Beyond the Long Walk—Look Into Hartford

The Real "HART" Of Hartford

by John E. Hardy

Rising crime rates and perceptions of an inadequate criminal justice system in Hartford were the main concerns voiced by local residents at the recent annual Community Congress. The meeting was held last Wednesday night in the recreation building at Hyland Memorial Park on New Britain Avenue. Approximately 100 area residents met to choose issues for workshops to be held at HART's seventh annual Community Congress on October 20. Neighborhood groups met separately early Wednesday evening to choose the two issues which they felt were most pressing to their areas. Later, all the groups present met in convention to select the workshops for the Congress. The crime problem seemed to be foremost to the entire crowd. Also, chosen, after lobbying efforts by HART organizers and neighborhood leaders, were two other workshops. One is to be an evaluation of public services in Hartford, with a specific emphasis on recent controversy surrounding the future of the Vernon Street public bus garage. The second workshop choices concerned residential property taxes. The property tax problem as very much on residents' minds, due to the emphasis on recent controversy surrounding the city's taxes. A tercer workshop was chosen to cover only the issue of improving Hartford's tax differential at lower rates than commercial property.

Adverse Publicity

Last year, the New York Times Selective Guide to Colleges described Trinity students as "prepped up and paraded out". Two weeks ago, an article in the Metropolitan section of the New York Times focused on Trinity. And finally, the Yale Daily News' Inside Guide To The Colleges, 1981-82 labeled the Trinity College student body as "anti-intellectual and apathetic." Why is it that Trinity receives such adverse publicity? Are Trinity students really partyers and unconcerned with academics, or is this reputation deserved undeserved?

While it can be disputed that Trinity students party, the Tripod believes that students who decide not to participate in this school's party scene do not party any more than students at other colleges. What is important here is the "wholeness" of the college experience. By that I mean an established balance between academics, extracurricular activities, and social activities. It is important for students to get involved in campus organizations and athletic teams, as well as to interact with one another on a social level, in order to undergo the personal growth experience which is an important aspect of the overall college experience.

Certainly, the primary reason for our being here is to obtain an outstanding undergraduate education. The Tripod believes that students can and should achieve this goal, and also get involved in other activities as well.

One outstanding aspect of Trinity that both the Times and the Yale Guide have failed to recognize is the near perfect balance and friendly atmosphere that is pervasive at Trinity. The Tripod believes that one of the reasons for this condition is because the majority of the students at Trinity are not overwhelmed with their academics that they have no time to engage themselves in other activities and meet people. This is not to say that academics at Trinity are not challenging. Quite the contrary. Yet, when considering the College's academic strategy for the 1980's, the committee should not lose sight of the importance of the "wholeness" of the college experience. The Tripod believes that the majority of the students at Trinity are not isolated from one another, and should not be penalized for inaccurate generalizations made by those not connected with the Trinity community. Granted, if students are oblivious to this adverse publicity, it becomes more difficult to dispel these kinds of statements. However, if students become aware of how others perceive them, they will never engage themselves in student activities, which will prevent them from emerging from the college experience as well-rounded individuals. The Tripod urges all students to be aware of all that Trinity has to offer, and not to become isolated from the Trinity College student body, or it can only be by what we all make of it.

Monks Do Not Beg!

To the Editor:

I have been surprised when I read the photo caption of last week's article on Mr. Crowford's visit to Trinity. I was among those who were told to me that a Buddhist monk, let alone four Buddhist monks, would "practice the ritual of begging for rice." Perhaps, is it that I'm not highly regarded in Asia, and therefore, people offer them food every morning. This is why I did not find the word "begging" to be appropriate. Besides, monks do not live on rice alone, as I do.

Sincerely,

Paspuri Phairawandhan

Winners Applaud Record Turnout

To the Student Body:

I would personally like to express my sincere gratitude to the Trinity student body for their overwhelming turnout on election day. This 70 percent turnout exemplifies a renewed student awareness and support.

Directly responsible for this success was Elections Committee Chairman, Steve Norton. Steve devoted many hours to insure a successful voter turnout, and I'd like to thank him for all his efforts. I would also like to thank all those who helped make my campaign a success.

I realize the tremendous amount of responsibility and hard work that comes with being President of the Student Government Association, and I pledge to do my utmost to serve the Trinity community.

Sincerely,

Todd Beattie
SGA President-Elect

Dear Mr. Rosenthal,

Your recent article, appearing in the September 7 Metropolitan Report entitled "Colleges Buzz With Life As Another Year Begins" by Susan Chira, has elicited concern from many of the students at Trinity College, Hartford.

The article represents a clear case of bias against our college.

While all of the students of the other colleges mentioned are concentrating both practical and esoteric facets of their education, the "hedonists" of Trinity waste their time with "beer pong" and their ears with "cranked tunes." The "involved" of Columbia, the "talented" of Yale, and the conscientious of Sarah Lawrence contrast sharply with your portrayal of Trinity students as irresponsible alcoholics. Although there are parties at Trinity, as well as at all other colleges, they are hardly the pervasive factor in our style of life.

Why were we singled out as a "party school"? Perhaps it is a perpetuation of Trinity's image in The New York Times Selective Guide To Colleges 1982-83 by Edward R. Sharp '35, where several colleges are presented in detail.

At least that's the result of our survey conducted by the Princeton, Harvard and Yale graduating classes of 1975.

As part of their 25th reunion project earlier this year, alumni from the three schools filled out a 36-question survey about everything from how many books they read to what they value about Reagonomics. The 25th-reunion class reunion message that says "like this," says Jim Merritt, a Princeton spokesman, "but this in the first we were not worried about schools — Princeton, Harvard and Yale — did the survey together.

In light of the controversy surrounding some of the answers, this may be the last year they do it, too, Merritt adds.

A significant number of alumni defined themselves as racists, sexist — and generally wealthy.

Only 36 percent of the Princetonians, for instance, say they believe black people are as intelligent as whites. Forty-seven percent of the Yale alumni and 55 percent of the Harvard alumni admired the races intellectually equal.

Seventy-three percent of the Princetonians agreed men and women are equally intelligent, but, again, more Yale and Harvard grads — 86 percent of them — proved to be liberal on the question.

Nearly half of the Princeton and Yale alumni endorsed Reaganomics, while Harvard class, with twice the number of registered Democrats, overwhelmingly (64-36 percent) rejected Reagonomics.

Most of our survey covered questions concerning topics like book reading, but the responses to political and social opinions have generated the most heat.

"It's kind of a worst-case scenario," complains Merritt. "Of all the questions, the ones that were pulled out by the press are the three regarding sex, race and politics. I think the class regrets ever putting those questions in.

Officials from all three schools have reacted cautiously, stressing their students are different. Twenty-five years ago, they say, the schools wouldn't have — for example, Princeton — recruited many students from the Deep South, who still held the values of their generation, not of their schools.

I think that's a generalization you could make about people in general," Merritt says. "The survey might be fairly representative of older, middle-class values in the United States."

They aren't representative of middle-class wealth in the current economic climate, where annual incomes hover around $15,000.

Only 5 percent of the Princeton and Harvard graduates confessed to earning less than $20,000 a year. The average Princeton and Yale's Class of '57 earns less than $20,000 a year.
Seven Singers Get It Together: After Dark

by Douglas Gass

Steve Kish, Matt George, Mike Brown, Tom Baker, Chris Saracen, Richard Freytag, Scott Gowell. After Dark, a singing group par excellence has been going strong for nearly a year on campus, having sung last spring at the Coffeehouse, and this fall with the Pipes in Hamlin. Despite enthusiastic receptions during their two on-campus shows, few knew what After Dark is all about. Sitting in on a recent rehearsal, and talking with group members afterward, I was able to learn more about Trinity's unsung vocalists.

It all started last autumn when Matt George '85, feeling a need for an all-male singing group on campus, advertised for male singers interested in singing barbershop music. The notice ultimately yielded Steve Kish '85, Tom Baker '85 and Mike Brown '82. They practiced all winter, establishing a repertoire of sea songs, drinking songs, contemporary classics, and songs about women. They are a male group and their music is male-oriented.

As they claim, after failing to sing the word that rhymes with a type of fish, they are not sexist. But they are not ready to release the male sex to a life of changing diapers, ironing and cooking duties. Actually, the men of the evening rather value their all-male status, finding versatility and chemistry not found in groups composed of men and women; After Dark's roots lie in barbershop music. Seeing them perform (they wear evening clothes minus dinner jackets) and listening to them sing, one might suspect them of trying to preserve the romance of the 1920's when men were men and women were women. They make no such pretensions, their style being influenced more by the musical range of the group and the availability of sheet music. Moreover, they seek to 'make it fun' for their audience and themselves, striving for the new and exciting, avoiding the stagnant. Their mood is simultaneously professional and casual.

They have fun while they practice but they don't fool around. A high degree of enthusiasm fills the room whenever they sing, the thrill coming, they say, when they hit a harmony especially well. Watching them rehearse, one can tell that they enjoy being together, forming a group in which all input is accepted and expected.

This spirit is embodied by Mike Brown, who was graduated last spring, but while looking for a job, he continued to sing with the group. Like all members, he feel a responsibility to the group's success and enjoys singing well. So, what does the future hold for these seven singers from the Hill? They want to continue improving and increasing their repertoire, including some spirituals and Grateful Dead. Their main goal, however, is to create a tradition that will remain strong at the school after they have graduated. In the meantime, they hope to arrange a number of off-campus engagements similar to the one they held at Shenanigan's (a Hartford restaurant), as well as a regular schedule of concerts. More than this, they want to be accepted at Trinity, which should not be too difficult, as anyone who heard them at the Pipes' freshman show can attest.

Theatre for the Deaf: Intriguing Dramatic Form

Austin Arts Center will host one of its most unique theater productions on September 29 when the National Theatre of the Deaf presents a new piece of its own creation in the Theatre's own remarkable fashion.

The new work, written by Shanny Mos and David Hays, concerns "The holierstes and harshy misadventures of an innocent fool during the roming, rooling quest for the grail by Parzial, the Charlie Chaplin of King Arthur's realmable".

The National Theatre of the Deaf speaks with two voices, one for the ear and one for the eye. By combining the spoken word with sign language, the Theatre created a new form of theater; it is magnifying for the stage the visual imagery inherent in sign language, the effect was also to magnify the spoken word. The English language was suddenly ex-
As part of its ambitious music program this year, Hartford's Gold Street, Hartford will present Antoine Tiskin, violinist, and Daniel, a Saturn Mueller, pianist, in a program of works by Krieger, Tchaikovsky and Beethoven. The program will begin at 12:00 noon on September 28. For a program reservation and lunch, call the Church at 249-5631 before 1:00 p.m. Tuesday, or simply come with your own lunch. A donation of $1.50 is suggested.

The world-renowned Chamber Society of Lincoln Center will appear at the Jorgensen Auditorium on the campus of the University of Connecticut in Storrs for a concert on October 4 at 8:00 p.m. This program kicks off its six-week series featuring the young artists of JSC's music program. Future programs feature the Tokyo String Quartet and flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal. Tickets for these concerts are available by calling the box office at 486-4226.

In a separate program, the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center will appear at the Jorgensen Auditorium. Professor Peter Schickele of LUSND will direct this evening of musical ensembles, promising to "tell you more about P.D.Q. Bach than you care to know."

The Wadsworth Athenæum Cinema will present six evenings of Avant Garde film of the 1920's and 1930's. The series will offer a rare opportunity to view films from one of the most exciting and innovative periods in film history; a period before filmmakers began formalizing the codes and constraints of filmmaking. The series begins October 5 at 7:30 p.m. with "Ranji's Agri-Prop," one of cinema's most experimental explorations of the role of sound and sound-image relationships. Student admission is free.

For those Hartford Symphony fans excited by the prospect of such a sophisticated musical season, be aware that the season has been indefinitely postponed due to a musician's strike. Amidst talk of "negotiations," "bargaining "table," and "forward movement," the Symphony Society looks to an early resolution of this situation.

Lauren's program will include Schumann's "Scena No. 2," Bach's "Magicien du Rae," and Ravel's "Sonate." General admission is $2.50; students and senior citizens, $1.00. For ticket information and reservations, please call the box office at 527-8062.

"Antigone" & "Mother Courage" Casts Announced

This year, Trinity students need to look no further than the Austin Arts Center for outstanding entertainment. The new Department of Theatre/Dance and Department of Music have put together a varied season full of classic and creative productions. The first of the in-house performances, "Antigone," will be presented on October 7-10. Roger Shomaker, of the Theatre Department, will direct Jean Anouilh's fascinating, contemporary version of the Greek classic. For the productions of "Mother Courage," the entire company of 100 actors will be the Music Department's orchestra. The performance will be the Music Department's first full production of the 1982-1983 season and will feature research and study of various aspects of "Mother Courage." Casts Announced

"On Borrowed Time" Heads Up Stage Season

by Sarah Shanty

This week the Hartford Stage Company begins its twenty-first anniversary season with Paul Osborn's, "On Borrowed Time," previews on September 21-23. September 2 - October 31, with Depression era, this endearing family classic reflects the thirties' essence of small town life and the appreciation. The play captures the charm of "On Borrowed Time," this week the Hartford Stage. "On Borrowed Time" is a story of works by Kriesler, music program series, Center Mueller, pianist, in a program of Avant Garde film of the 1920's and 1930's. The series will offer a rare opportunity to view films from one of the most exciting and innovative periods in film history; a period before filmmakers began formalizing the codes and constraints of filmmaking.

Goodwin Theatre of the Austin Arts Center on Friday, September 24 at 8:15. Linda Laurent comes from New York City, where she earned her Master's degree from the Juilliard School in 1969, and received her Ph.D. from New York University in 1982. Among her teachers have been Stanley Hamel, Emil Dantesen, Sascha Gorodnitzki, Felix Galiming, and Herbert Stessin. From 1973 to 1977, she lived in Paris, researching her thesis topic, and studying with Gaby Casadesus and, at Fontainebleu, Nadia Boulanger.

Her performances in New York include programs at International House, NYU, the Whitney Museum, and the United Nations. Accompanied by a New York dance troupe, Ms. Laurent toured the Caribbean Islands, Israel and Romania. But she is best known in the arts, where she has performed annually: concerts, solo recitals, and two-piano performances with Stanley Humel, most notably at the Empire State and Saratoga Performing Arts Festival. The Albany Times-Union has written of her playing: "Her time is full and has the singing quality the keyboard practitioners of an earlier and more romantic persuasion favored...the desired mixture of glamour, virtuosity and lyric romanticism...a fully fledged, imaginative arid of major stature."

Prior to the meet, Walde had expressed a cautious optimism.
"We have a large group of runby a number of freshman and new upperclassmen." He expected Tall and Klots to set the pace in the meet, with Barry, coming off his outstanding season in track, short behind.

This prediction was nearly true, except for Klots' continuing problems in running a good race in Middletown. Other problems, such as depth, are expected to be solved as the season progresses and as runners such as Moughalian get into shape. Other runners expected to be a factor in the team's fortunes include senior captains Krister Johnson, and Joe

One of the biggest meets for the women's team will be against Wesleyan. Last year, Trinity took the first two places, but lack of depth, due to injuries, resulted in a close loss. Walde summed up this year's meet against Wesleyan and other teams by saying, "How the women's team does against the competition will depend for a large part on some of the new run-ers this year."

Try, try, try again, and score! That has been the message in practice this week for the

Coach Robin Sheppard, commenting on the squad's performance in the September 11 Smith Jamboree, expressed disappointment on the field were "the same bodies in the same positions as last year," yet, "our game did not flow." Sheppard is hoping that Kate Castle and Weezie Kerr,
"who have good connecting passes in the striking circle, will got the ball into the goal."

New to Sheppard's game plan this season are assigned responsibilities under which "certain people will take the free hits." In addition, "one attack player will be up field, ahead of the forward line, in order to create an offensive threat."

Sheppard noted marked improvement on the junior varsity from attackman Anne Morris and from Mary Horrop, who "looks very strong."

The varsity is also working on their attitude. In previous years, Trinity's women's field hockey team has been one of the strongest in New England. Sheppard, however, feels that "we are not failing or playing like winners."
Newcomers Pass With High Marks

It was a week of opening tests for two new members of the Trinity tennis family. Fortunately, both top seed Claire Slaughter and new coach Becky Chase passed with flying colors.

With no offense intended, Slaughter's test was a bit simpler. After all, the freshman from Birmingham, Michigan had to do was something she'd done well since she was five, play tennis. It is safe to say that her 4-0 record in her first week of play was a tennis 'A'.

Slaughter's easy test began two years ago when her family went on a trip to thirteen colleges. Trinity emerged as Slaughter's second choice behind Princeton because "it offered the small college atmosphere I was looking for and was not in the boonies." When Princeton turned down her application, she explains, "it was pretty well set that I was going to go here."

After playing tournament tennis intensively from the time she was eight, Slaughter stopped in junior high school and began to play team tennis. The tennis bug bit her again during sophomore year and, Thursday Afternoon although Slaughter claims that "it took a year or two to get back where I was before," the played number one for three years in high school. During her senior year Slaughter was ranked 40th in the misnamed Western Region, which includes Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin.

An aggressive player who idolized Evonne Goolagong and admires to "having to watch Andrea Jaeger and Tracy Austin play," Slaughter has kept the first week of her freshmen season behind a game that features excellent net play, no easy trick on Trinity's slow red clay courts, and a fearsome return of serve.

Before Slaughter left Michigan, her coach told her that if she didn't play number one she shouldn't come home. It is nice to know that Slaughter will be able to go home over vacation.

For Chase, the test was of a more internal and important nature. On Wednesday, Chase, who will coach both women's tennis and squash, swept through the first week of her freshman season behind a game that features excellent net play, no easy trick on Trinity's slow red clay courts, and a fearsome return of serve.

Women's Tennis Team Begins With Tough Week; Stands 2-2

by Tom Wilcox

In a grueling opening stretch of four matches in five days, the women's tennis team fought through a variety of difficulties and emerged with a 2-2 record.

In their season opener against the University of Hartford, the team looked extremely sharp. Claire Slaughter, the top seed, displayed a complete arsenal of shots in a 6-1,6-0 walkover. Jeanine Looney used a solid baseline attack and well-placed passing shots to win 6-2,6-2.

In the most exciting match of the afternoon, Ruth Strong rallied in the second set and won 6-4,7-5. After falling behind 5-4, Strong used a volley and some fantastic baseline play to even the count at 5-5. Strong then held serve to take a 6-5 lead and broke her opponent's serve in the 11th game to sweep the set and the match. Trinity's final point in the 6-1 win came by default.

Visiting Wellesley proved to be a frustrating experience as the hosts edged the Bantams 5-4. Slaughter, Looney, and Strong won their second matches of the week and Chancie Johnson won her opener, but it was not enough as Wellesley doubled up and took all three doubles matches and the match.

Saturday found the Bants on the road again as the squad traveled to Amherst to take on Rutgers as well as the host team.

Rutgers, however, was no ordinary opponent. The State University of New Jersey is a Division I institution featuring full four-year tennis scholarships. The added emphasis on a student-athlete was shown as the Scarlet Knights triumphed 7-2.

Not surprisingly, Slaughter had a hand in both Trinity victories. The freshman star whipped Patsy Naugath 6-0,6-1 at number one singles and teamed with Johnson to win the first doubles match 6-2,6-3. Trinity, however, only managed to take one set in the other seven matches.

The Bants finally got a chance to show their depth against traditional foe in Saturday's final and crushed Amherst 7-2. Slaughter recorded her first win.

Offense Leads Women's Soccer To Easy 8-0 Win

by Tom Wilcox

An eight-goal offensive blitz from the Trinity women's soccer team buried Curry College Saturday afternoon. The win upped the Bants' record to 2-0.

The game was dominated by Trinity as evidenced by the Bants' thirty-six shots on goal. Although Curry goal tender Laurie Driscoll managed twenty-eight saves, as opposed to one for Jeanne Monnes, the game was decided early on.

Karen Orzyczek got the first of her three scores early in the first half to put the Bants up 1-0. Tris moved ahead 2-0 moments later when Cindy Cappelletti capitalized on a penalty kick awarded after a Curry defender handled the ball in the penalty area. Co-captain Sally Larks scored the third goal and assisted on a fourth score by Mary Zavizza before the half.

Chris Laydecker, Prudential Home, and Orzyczek's second and third goals of the game closed the scoring. The margin of victory allowed Coach Karen Erlandson to substitute extensively.

The Bants had opened the season with a 4-2 victory at Smith. Horne led the way with two goals as Trinity opened their fourth season of women's soccer with a win.
Janney’s Two Goals In First Half Key Win.

by Marc Esterman

The Trinity Bantams’ varsity soccer team started its season on a high note as it soundly defeated the home-standing Coast Guard, 4-1, on Saturday morning. Last year, the Bantams could muster only nine goals in twelve games, so the renewed scoring punch has coach Robbie Schults in an optimistic mood.

Reserve midfielder David Janney blasted home two goals, and the defense, which allowed just over one goal per game last year, lived up to its reputation to lead the home side to victory over the Guardsmen, who countered with a simple, straight-ahead attack.

The Bantams dominated the first 45 minutes, scoring three times, but a late first-half goal by the Coast Guard fueled an early second-half onslaught by the home team.

“We weathered the storm in the second half and came back strong. The fourth goal by Chris Palma really clinched it,” said Schults.

In addition, the defense of seniors Greg Brown and Mike Hurwitz, one of the tri-captains, and sophomores Jeff Pilgrim and Mike Lagana shut down the Coast Guard’s potent offense throughout the game.

“Hurwitz stifled Adam Bilure, the Coast Guard’s outstanding scoring threat from Africa, and was supported by the entire defensive unit. He played especially well at right-fullback,” said Schults.

Forward Jamie Kapteyn started off the scoring for Trinity at 20:25 of the first-half, knocking one home from the 18-yard stripe after a poor clearing pass from a Coast Guard defender.

David Janney, a midfielder, gave Trinity a 2-0 lead at the 36:00 mark. The goal was set up by a marvelous effort from Barney Corning, who sped down the right wing and fed Janney at the far post.

Moments later, Janney connected again on an unassisted goal to give the Bantams a commanding 3-0 advantage. Janney darted down the right sideline, beat two defenders, and cut in all alone on the goalie, scoring from a tough angle.

The Coast Guard showed some resiliency though and knocked a goal with just two minutes left in the first half off a corner kick and ensuing scramble in the goal crease.

Chris Palma, returning to form after a poor starting season, connected again on an unassisted goal, in the second half, after a short-lived comeback by the Coast Guard in the opening minutes. The score enabled Schults to substitute freely, without endangering the win.

The Bantams will try to make it two in a row against Central Connecticut on September 21st in the home opener at 3:00 p.m. Connecticut will be aided by last year’s club that beat Trinity 3-0. But Schults remains confident.

“I was pleased with our overall performance against the Coast Guard, and I’m looking for a well-played, exciting game on Tuesday,” erased the Bantam coach.

Soccer Upsets Coast Guard In Opener 4-1

Misplaced X-Country Starts With Victory

by Steve Klots

Prior to their first meet on Saturday, the Trinity cross-country team had a lot of questions to answer. “Could the squad overcome the loss of Robert Rasmussen to graduation? Would it survive a new, revamped schedule that includes the likes of Yale and UConn?” These and many other questions were answered Saturday with a resounding “maybe.”

The men’s team went to Quinnipiac full of hope, the women’s team not scheduled to run. The squad had looked good in workouts, and the scouting reports on Quinnipiac and Stonehill held them to be a pushover. When the team arrived at the school, they found the ‘host’ team departing for the Wesleyan Invitational. A certain lack of communication between the Trinity and Quinnipiac athletic departments had caused the Bantams to have no opponent.

Trinity coach Ralph Walde solved this problem by inviting the team to the Wesleyan meet, where the runners now faced off against Quinnipiac and Connecticut College. Wesleyan and Coast Guard also participated in the meet, but due to their position on Trinity’s schedule at a later date, they were not counted as running in the meet against Trinity. Trinity beat both Quinnipiac and Connecticut College in the overall team score by 89-90-129.

The race began with a pack of twelve runners quickly forming a lead pack; juniors Steve Tall and Steve Klots were among these racers. The strength of the Wesleyan and Coast Guard teams quickly showed as several of their runners surged ahead. As far as the Bantams were concerned, however, the scarcity of Quinnipiac and Connecticut runners was good news. Although those teams took the first two places among the three teams, Trinity’s depth proved to be the deciding factor.

Tall and Dave Barry tied for best finish among the Trinity runners, as Barry came on quick in the last two miles to catch Tall;
