On Campus Crime Decreases

by Steve Klots

Crime on campus went down last semester, according to the Semi-Annual Report of the Security Department. Compared with similar time periods in the previous two years, the number of incidents was down 37 percent from 1980 and 25 percent from 1981. A large portion of the decrease was in the category of "crimes against property." These occurrences dropped by 21 percent. The main reason why there were fewer thefts was a smaller number of burglaries from automobiles, which dropped by 50 percent. Traditionally, the protection of automobiles against thieves has been a problem at Trinity. An increase in the number of security patrols in the parking lots was credited with causing this decrease.

Because of the additional time put in by Security, thefts of motor vehicles also dropped substantial-ly. The three motor vehicle thefts this year occurred on Summit St., Vernon, and at 194 New Britain Ave. This was down from nine incidents first semester last year, when there were four on Summit St., two on Allen Place, and three others spread around campus. Summit St. was also the area most susceptible to thefts from automobiles. Fifteen such events were recorded in that area last semester. This figure was down from 26, however.

Security did record an increase in the number of thefts from dormitories, but that was only by 8 percent from the previous year. The majority of these occurrences were aided by unlocked or open doors, either exterior or interior. Small increases numerically were recorded of bicycle thefts and of larcenies. Five incidents of this type occurred in the time period in this dormitory, including one from a storage area. Although the North Campus figure is higher, it is a reduction from eight in the previous year's time period.

There were also fewer events categorized as "crimes against persons." Only one incident of sexual assault was reported between July and December of 1982 (the time period for the statistics), and that was a relatively minor event. This is compared with three such occurrences in the previous year, a drop of 67 percent. Armed robberies and expondings also dropped, leading to a total reduction of 50 percent from the previous year in this category.

Vandalism was down from six-teen incidents on college property to twelve. This decrease was usually minor, with vending machines within the dormitories tending to be the primary targets of the culprits. A dramatic decrease in the number of cars vandalized was recorded — from 38 to 23. Once again a systematic pattern of crime was recorded in the Summit St. area, with 14 of these incidents of vehicular vandal-ism occurred on that road.

The Report concluded that the crime category which has tradition-ally raised the total statistics (thefts from motor vehicles) was halved in the time period by Security's recognition of the prob-lem and a consequential alloca-tion of resources to reduce it. The Report added that "it is indicative to note that although crime in general, in the City of Hartford has also decreased, theft from motor vehicles has increased city wide." The increased protection afforded to the college community was not just through increased time efforts, but increased financial outlays on security also. The Report stated, "The additional manpower deployed in the past year has impacted negatively upon the budget of the Security Depart-ment, but, the rewards of the reduction in crime far outweigh its cost. The increased security visibility has also spilled over in affecting the reduction in other crime categories, more specifi-cally, crimes against persons, and further reducing the fear of crime at Trinity."

Management Workshop

The Division of Continuing Education, supported by the Department of Industrial Engineering at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, is offering Participatory Management and Quality of Worklife, an intensive two-day workshop at three locations.

The workshop, designed for managers and engineers who want to use a more advanced method of participatory management, will be held at the Sheraton-Bridgeport Hotel in Bridgeport, Connecticut, on February 16 and 17; at the Howard Johnson Motor Inn in New Mars, on April 21 and 22; and at the Sheraton-Large West Springfield, Mass. on June 22 and 23. The workshop fee is $325 which includes two lunches, coffee breaks, and all instructional materials.

For more information, contact the Division of Continuing Education, University of Massachusetts at Amherst; (413) 545-0474.

Psychology Honor Society Welcomes New Members

It has recently been felt among undergraduate psychology majors that there has not been enough opportunity to gain national recognition for outstanding performance in psychology. Trinity has tried to fill this need by the bestowment of a number of academic honors and prizes to people in many specific areas and for high academic achievement in general, yet for many years has lacked an academic honor for psychology. As of March, 1982, Trinity has had as official chair of the Phi Chi National Honor Society, providing Psychology students with the opportunity to gain this kind of recognition. The society offers members the chance to participate in activities on a national level and to present papers for publication.

Phi Chi National Honor Society was founded in 1929, with the purpose of encouraging, stimulating, and maintaining scholarship in, and advancing the science of psychology. The society is an affiliate of the American Psychological Association and a member of the Association of College Honor Societies. Theta Chi first formed a chapter of Phi Chi in 1959 and maintained it until the Society, when a number of academic societies disappeared from campus. Efforts to re-establish the chapter represent one of the several attempts by faculty and students to improve the intellectual atmosphere of the college and to generate interest in intellectual pursuits.

Chapter president Thomas Eyd and Lisa Nebbia welcomed eight new members to the Trinity chapter of Phi Chi on Tuesday, January 25, 1983. New members are: Dana Anderson, Marlene Aeling, Wendy Corbin, Brian O'Connell, Rebecca Opf, Debbie Shelling, Tracy Swecker, and Kathy Villano. Faculty advisor is Professor William M. Maetz and Sharon D. Hersberger of the Psychology Department.

St. A's Occupancy of Ogilby is Questioned

college is not in violation of Title IX, nor can she conclude that the law is an attorney and has consulted with the Trinity Hall issue a number of times. She feels, however, that the law is written unclearly, which creates a problem to discriminate by sex in a certain number of specific instances as well as for handicap access at the entire housing programs. One then feels, however, that the law is written unclearly, which creates a number of problems when one attempts to apply it to specific situations.

If the law did indeed apply to entire housing programs, one then encounters the question of whether it is proper for an institution to discriminate by sex in a number of specific instances as well as for handicap access at the entire housing programs. One then feels, however, that the law is written unclearly, which creates a number of problems when one attempts to apply it to specific situations.

When asked how she feels about the agreement between the College and Delta Psi, Denney said, "I think the agreement is an agreement that troubles me as a lawyer." The agreement has been the topic of negotiations between the College and the fraternity since 1977. The College's legal firm and Dr. Denney have spent considerable time researching the agreement in an attempt to find if the document is legal and what changes can be made to the agreement in order to make it more clear and concise. Denney feels that because of the nature of Title IX and the college's agreements, she is unable to make a definite statement on the status of Ogilby Hall.

According to Banker, the practice of filling some of the rooms with friends of members of Delta Psi who aren't themselves members has been discontinued and the student rooms are currently occupied solely by St. A's members. Banker also noted that the fraternity sees the exclusion of the college from the agreement to make it more clear and concise.

World Affairs To Travel to Model U.N.

The World Affairs Association is planning another semester of internationally-oriented activities, this year under the direction of new Office of Programming. The office, headed by Cathy Marcus, will focus on American Jewish issues. The Fourth Generation," will take place at 8 p.m. in the Washington Room of the Mather Campus Center. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend. The conference will extend 38 feet from the original face and add another 40 fees for the patio.

As part of the Mather renovation process, a few students have undertaken a project to beautify the construction site. It is assumed to add flavor to Mather, so keep your eyes open.

Security fee changes and an Awareness Day in February were the topics of S.G.A. meeting on January 25. Anne Collins moved to raise the automobile parking fee from $24 to $30 per month. The motion passed 18 for, 4 against, and 1 abstention. Later in the meeting Robert Sinnamon moved to reconsider the motion and it failed 11 for, 9 against and 4 abstentions.

Awareness Day plans were also discussed. The committee was questioned as to the fee keynote speaker Deputy Mayor Rudy Arnold was receiving. As the committee was working out their own budget they explained they were within their monetary limits. The Election Committee reported places are open for Junior and Freshman class representatives. Dorm representatives are needed for Anadama, Funston and Wheaton. Two off-campus representatives are also needed.

Steve Norton gave the Budget Committee report asking the consideration of raising the Student Activities fee to cover the deficits of this year. No motion was raised at the meeting.

Sklar To Deliver Final Greenberg Lecture

by College News Bureau

Professor Marshall Sklar, Kazinian Family Professor of Contemporary Jewish Studies and Sociology, and director of the Center for Modern Jewish Studies at Brandeis University, will give his final lecture at the Leonard E. Greenberg Series in Jewish Contributions to Western Civilization on February 14, 1983. The title of Sklar's lecture, entitled "Living in American Society: American Jewish Identity from the First to the Fourth Generation," will take place at 8 p.m. in the Washington Room of the Mather Campus Center. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Sometimes called the "dean of American Jewish sociology," Sklar is the editor of the recent Understanding American Jewry and the author of Conservative Judaism, America's Jews, and Jewish Identity on the Suburban Frontier.

Mather Update

by Robin L. Fins

Since last week, a few more changes are visible on the Mather Campus Center renovation. A temporary cement walkway has been constructed in front of the dormitory, the perimeter of the site along with a ramp for handicap access at the front door. The front door of Mather has been closed to facilitate the continuance of the renovation process. It is assured to be complete the foundation. The "hole" is much bigger since construction began in March. The final lecture in the Leonard E. Greenberg Series in Jewish Cultural and Political Studies at Trinity College will represent Japan in the final U.N. Resolution Series, which allows professors to speak on specific topics of their choosing.

Awareness Day is a Model Security Council, which will follow the procedures of this highly important part of the United Nations. This simulation, lasting a full day, will encourage organized discussion among various professors and students, and will enable them to work on solutions leading to international problems.

There will be no Awareness Day meeting this week, due to the Phi Delta Theta Conference, however, there will be a meeting on Sunday, February 13 at 7 p.m. in the Student Activities Office. New members are always welcome.
Opinion

A Response (Part Two): Exclusiveness and Ogilby

by Steve Klots

Last week, I wrote on racism and the validity of the single-sex institution. Now comes the promised examination of exclusiveness.

Can exclusive organizations be justified in any way? How can a fraternity develop a select criterion to decide who belongs to their organization? Furthermore, how can the rules of fraternities lead to a deleterious "us and them" mentality? These are some of the questions which the fraternities must answer before they can be allowed to exist. Since they don't seem especially eager to do this, here goes my attempt.

Obviously, some sort of exclu-siveness is allowable when there is sufficient reason for it and sufficient benefit from it. Trinity College benefits from exclusiveness by becoming more prestigious plus by obtaining a good, academic student body. That is one obvious example. But can this reasoning apply to fraternities, where the goals of the organization are less obvious than the standard of academic excellence? Furthermore, what about those who are left out?

As discussed with sexism, one of the most obvious problems for single-sex sororities is brotherhood and sisterhood. Fraternities have to be selective or else they cannot provide this brotherhood for two reasons. First, there are the obvious benefits of having a group of like-minded individuals. Secondly, the idea of a liberal arts college itself implies that there are certain qualifications for being a member of a particular organization. The system can be changed so that it is based, in reality, more on the ideals of service, etc.

If there is still more qualified prospective members than positions available, should they all be allowed to join the fraternity or sorority? When an excess of members is arrived at, it is obvious that some prospective members have to be turned away. In a democracy, it is not fair to the prospective member if the college cannot accept everyone who wishes to join.

The problem arises when one tries to decide who belongs. When a prospective member applies for a position in an exclusive fraternity or sorority, the selection process is pretty much entirely beyond his control. This differs somewhat from, using the above example, applying for college where prospective students who meet the standards are presumably within his control. There is usually a subjective element in that application process, but it is the same one used to support the point has been made.

Trinity is also guilty of having standards which are beyond the obvious and subjective. For example: One is the person who is, in my opinion, deficient. Another is the interest and involvement of a prospective student. It is obvious that these standards are much more important. Trinity is also guilty of having standards which are beyond the obvious and subjective. First, Trinity has to reject a certain number of prospective students each year, especially for this reason, and it is only a few who are admitted due to physical limitations of the college. The whole idea behind fraternity-sorority system need to be maintained, however. Trinity has to reject a certain number of prospective students each year, especially for this reason.

Today's editorial of the Tripod raises the interesting question of why the college should do about St. A's and Ogilby Hall. This issue is a no-win situation for the Trinity administration. Since official Tripod policy is now no more "against" editorial, I feel it was important for me to comment on the problem separately from the newspaper.

Half of all Trinity undergraduates never have the chance to live in Ogilby — the college's women students. Many benefits accrue to the students who live in that dormitory, but the primary one is the luxury of a three room double. Women are discriminated against by not being allowed to enjoy this elegance.

The whole college also subsidizes the spatial accommodations of Ogilby, but only a few enjoy this benefit. How can one justify taking money from the whole student body to finance the comfort of a few? Strong ethical implications certainly manifest themselves in these issues. From what I understand of the situation, the college agreed to reserve the northern two-thirds of Ogilby Hall for female students. Besides the legal implications of breaking a contract, would it be morally justified for the college to go against its word?

Furthermore, although the college does pay for the opulence of Ogilby, the money to pay for the dormitory comes from the fraternites themselves. If it weren't for that financing, Trinity wouldn't even have the dormitory. It can be argued very easily that these financial dimensions justify the reservation of Ogilby for the fraternity as they were the basis for the original understanding between the college and St. Anthonys Hall.

In spite of the conflict between all of these ethical and legal problems, it seems to me that the college needs to take some action. First of all, there is the west wing. I can understand and sympathize with St. A's desire to keep it limited to Hall members. The original contract, however, explains that the "west wing is to be available to any upperclassmen." Both parties need to adhere to the contract as agreed. If St. A's wants to use the contract to defend its rights in the northern wing of the building, it will have to respect the rights of the college concerning the west wing.

As to the rest of Ogilby, several different courses of action can be taken without removing residence from the building. Opinions differ as to whether the status quo should be maintained. The college could change the dormitory to three person rooms, thus eliminating the luxury that the members currently enjoy which isn't open to the whole college. If the fraternity wanted to maintain the larger rooms, it could agree to pay a surcharge. Trinity could wash its hands of the situation by selling Ogilby back to the fraternity. These ideas need time for study, obviously.

One last consideration is the dining hall in Ogilby. Since there are fewer problems involved with this question (the college does not subsidize it, for example), it seems to me that there should be no difficulty with letting St. A's maintain use of that facility.
Junior Returns From Outward Bound

by Matthew Carey

Steve Walsh, in his fifth session at Trinity, spent the last three months (excluding Christmas vacation) traversing the American wilderness from Isle Royale on Lake Superior to the White Mountains. His odyssey cost him $2,000 apiece, check payable to Outward Bound. “It was definitely worth it,” he says. He worked six jobs last summer to cover the costs.

Unlike his first experience with that organization (three weeks at $800) the folks involved in this trip were clearly more serious about the program. No one had to be a he-man or woman about it. The name of the game was companionship and cooperation. Beyond the practical wilderness training available was the unmistakable emphasis on group skills — working toward a goal together. To Steve the trip remains the cornerstone of his experience. “There were men and women of ages stretching between eighteen and thirty. We were as strong as our weakest link,” he says.

Outward Bound is not supposed to be based on “survivalist” principles. The idea is to learn how, laying personal faults aside, a successful endeavor relies upon the diversity of function a group can provide. Steve admits that on occasion he wanted to leave the group behind in order to explore. Many of the others seemed glad enough to come upon the few camps and cabins that are part of the deal.

The course involves numerous hours of backpacking, canoeing (with the inevitable portages), rock-climbing and the famous three-day solo hunger mission, where one is left alone in the wilderness to feed on contemplation. From Minnesota the group flew to Hanover, N.H. for more of the same. Between the outdoor affairs, one is instructed in history (try, not far trading in the Great Northwest). And for two and a half weeks everyone collaborates in the building of a log cabin!

Beyond The Long Walk

The American Two-Step

by Peter A. Stinson

Gerrard’s Cross. The rolling hills of Buckinghamshire are green — not a staid, green grey, bright, vibrant, emerald green. And, it is January. Virginia was grey when I left the States. Bucks is green; I prefer green.

I have been here almost a week, enjoying and savoring every delicious minute. Gerrard’s Cross is a small village of very large house. It is thirty minutes from West End London by train.

In my time here I have noticed many things. When I open my mouth it is profoundly obvious that I am American. I have been told that I have a Pittsburgh accent. I talk as American as possible, but am growing tired of mine.

My first impression of England came from Heathrow Airport. Nothing struck me as all the different until I stepped outside. The cars were low, sleek, and stubby. Everyone drives on the left — but it never registered. I have discovered to my dismay that English pubs close at eleven — and don’t open for the evening session until five-thirty. I have also discovered that the ham sandwich of England is a single slice of white bread with butter on one and mustard on the other. The English are not known for their sandwiches. However, their stews are absolutely superb. There is nothing better than some traditional “pub grub” and a pint of lager. Some say that lager should be bitter, but that is an acquired taste which I have yet to fully appreciate.

In England the Cadbury Egg is always in season. Follet’s, eat your heart out.

Across from the Cambridge Theatre I am huddled over my London Act like a tourist. Thanks to Hans Paull I have this Act and also thanks to HP I know that it is pronounced A to Zed. It is the Deluxe Edition, well worn, and too large to fit in a pocket. I have no plans to hide it, and I look like a tourist. I do not want to look like a tourist — but at least I will look like a tourist.

Restaurant View:
36 Lewis St.

by Gary Christella

If you’re getting bored of Brown Thompson & Company and are too broke for the Brownstone, there’s a great restaurant that combines the casual menu of Brown Thompson with the warm country/Victorian atmosphere of the Brownstone. The name, 36 Lewis Street.

The menu at Lewis Street is diverse, but somewhat limited. For the most part, it has a Mexican flair and is reasonably priced. To begin your meal, I recommend a selection from the “Snacks and Starters” section which offers only five items, but all are good. The most tempting appetizers are the chicken wings and the nachos. My dinner partner and I went for the nachos, which were incredibly tasty. Crispy nacho chips covered in a blend of melted cheeses with olive, pepper, and green chilli. The nachos were accompanied by a sour cream dip and a zesty Mexican sauce.

Among these are barbecued ribs, fresh swordfish, steak and barbecue chicken breast. All of which are served with fresh tossed green salad (I recommend the House Dressing — a delicious creamy herb salad) and your choice of steak fries or potato salad. I ordered the barbecued ribs but was disappointed to learn that the cook neglected to take them out of the freezer that afternoon. So, I had the barbecued chicken breast instead. A perfect, plump chicken breast smothered in a tangy, mouth-watering barbecue sauce.

The dinner portions were very generous. So generous in fact, that we declined from having dessert. By the way, the dessert menu offers only four items so it is difficult to give an accurate evaluation of the service. Our waitress, Nancy, was very pleasant, alert and attentive to our needs. I talked to some of my friends who dined at Lewis Street the following night and they had no complaints.

36 Lewis Street is currently renovating part of its upstairs lounge; it is expected to be completed in about four weeks. From what I understand, they offer a different menu upstairs. They also have a large dance floor and live music on selected week nights which could only add to a splendid evening at Lewis Street.

The organization was founded in Germany in the 1930s. Its motto is: “To serve, to strive, and not to yield.” Outward Bound sponsors a program for the handicapped as well as for delinquent youths and is an international consortium.

Back at the real camp, Steve expresses some dissatisfaction about the service, severing from his “wanderjahr.” “It was a hard adjustment,” he says. “I was bored to tears and could barely wait to return to Philly,” he added. Last for a time had been infused by a rigid framework of careful planning; nonetheless, he remarks, “it sometimes became a real trial just deciding what to have lunch out there.”

He faces me in a blue sweat suit; his eyes wander longingly to the red back-pack on top of his closet...
The TRINITY TRIPOD, February 1, 1983

EDITORIAL

Ogilby: Legal and Ethical Considerations

Recently, a number of revelations concerning the current status of dormitory and residence on Ogilby Hall have come to light. The first and most important is the question of ownership. Since the construction of Ogilby Hall, Trinity College has always been perceived of residence in the North Wing over all other students participating in the housing lottery. Although one might believe that Delta Psi owns the dormitory, this is not the case. Although the fraternity did in fact build the dorm, it was sold to the College in 1941. Presently, the College continues to own and maintain Ogilby Hall.

Obviously, there are some legal considerations. As was pointed out in the previous paragraph, the College discriminates against students who are not brothers of Delta Psi by not including Ogilby in the housing lottery in which these students participate. In addition, the College maintains Ogilby as a dormitory in a dormitory system maintained by student tuition. One man argue with these contents, but an opposing case can be made, based on the law itself. Title IX specifically refers to the overall housing program of a College or University. Undeniably, Trinity's overall housing program is equitable and non-discriminatory.

Furthermore, the signed agreement between the Board of Trustees and Delta Psi, drawn up in 1941, leaves legal wrack of Ogilby Hall to the College for the token sum of one dollar, with the stipulation that Delta Psi continues to own and maintain the dormitory. The event is called to a halt at the bidding of concerned students. The Ogilby Hall was designed as a day to look at ourselves and our current way to relate to each other, the Hartford Community, and important campus events and groups. The Freshman Awareness Day was extreme successfully in bringing students together over the issues of racism, sexism, and alcoholism, which are too often swept under the rug.

This year's Awareness Day, Feb. 14, has been thoroughly and sensitively thought through. So much has been crammed into one day that every student should find something appealing to him or her. Seminars, which will be defined precisely in the next few days, will range from Sexuality, Vandalism, Male Stereotypes and the Third World.

Discussion groups will be informal. These hours will be time to air some thoughts, complaints, and ideas about the many social ills which plague society and are present in the Trinity Community. Are you satisfied with your undergraduate education? What can be done to make Trinity a better place to live and learn? All of these questions will be explored during the part of the day.

Obviously, no problem—racism, sexism, alcoholism—can be solved in just one day. Some of you might not participate in the day's events or help in the planning of them because you feel that it will not do any good anyway. However, it is worth a try to make it clear that at least forty or fifty unthinking and unaware individuals at Trinity will be a little wiser for the better on Feb. 14. This year's Awareness Day will provide students with the opportunity to discover something in ourselves or in someone else that they never thought about before. You might be that person. Who knows?

If you participated in Awareness Day two years ago, are interested in helping plan the day, or have any other ideas or suggestions, please contact CHRIS SULLIVAN at 249-2526 or ANNE COLLINS at 249-0342.

Sincerely,
Chris Sullivan

Co-Chairpersons of the Awareness Day Committee

To the Student Body:

Many students have recently been asking questions: "What is Awareness Day?" What's the purpose behind the day? I'm writing on Monday, Feb. 14! We would like to take this opportunity to answer these questions and provide some background on the purpose of this day.

Awareness Day was initiated two years ago when tension was running extremely high between black and white students and between feminists and fraternity brothers, and students and administrators. To avoid the same situation, classes were called to a halt at the bidding of concerned students. This year, Awareness Day was designed as a day to look at ourselves and our current way to relate to each other, the Hartford Community, and important campus events and groups. Some of you might not participate in the day's events or help in the planning of them because you feel that it will not do any good anyway. However, it is worth a try to make it clear that at least forty or fifty unthinking and unaware individuals at Trinity will be a little wiser for the better on Feb. 14. This year's Awareness Day will provide students with the opportunity to discover something in ourselves or in someone else that they never thought about before. You might be that person. Who knows?

If you participated in Awareness Day two years ago, are interested in helping plan the day, or have any other ideas or suggestions, please contact CHRIS SULLIVAN at 249-2526 or ANNE COLLINS at 249-0342.

Freshman Runs for '86 Representative

To the members of the class of 1986,

SGA elections have been scheduled for this week. Don't forget to vote. I'm running for the vice president slot. So much has been crammed into one day that every student should find something appealing to him or her. Seminars, which will be defined precisely in the next few days, will range from Sexuality, Vandalism, Male Stereotypes and the Third World.

Discussion groups will be informal. These hours will be time to air some thoughts, complaints, and ideas about the many social ills which plague society and are present in the Trinity Community. Are you satisfied with your undergraduate education? What can be done to make Trinity a better place to live and learn? All of these questions will be explored during the part of the day.

Obviously, no problem—racism, sexism, alcoholism—can be solved in just one day. Some of you might not participate in the day's events or help in the planning of them because you feel that it will not do any good anyway. However, it is worth a try to make it clear that at least forty or fifty unthinking and unaware individuals at Trinity will be a little wiser for the better on Feb. 14. This year's Awareness Day will provide students with the opportunity to discover something in ourselves or in someone else that they never thought about before. You might be that person. Who knows?

Faculty, It's Not Too Late

Elsewhere in this section appears a letter from the SGA committee organizing Awareness Day, to be held on February 14. All students and faculty members are encouraged to participate and attend. This message is directed specifically toward the Faculty.

It has come to our attention that Faculty participation in Awareness Day seminars and other related activities is, as yet, very weak and hesitant. Let us hope that faculty members feel this way because they will be a crippling blow to the success of Awareness Day.

Why then should you bother conducting a seminar or participating in a panel discussion or any one of a number of other events? Hereupon, one could fahide an extended statement about the role of the professor in the private college. Suffice it to make a simple observation.

Looking in on the office of a typical Faculty member, there are usually hundreds and hundreds of books. It would be truly hard to believe that any Faculty member has not read about at least one injustice or conflict, the circumstances or consequences of which would be beneficial and interesting to a number of students.

It is not too late to get things organized for this special day. Faculty members are urged to assume a renewed sense of social responsibility not to educate and stretch the minds of students on Awareness Day '83.
Reaction and ReReaction

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to your printing a letter written by Stephen F. Green ('65). I do not think I am alone in finding the letter both blatantly sexist and extremely offensive. I am astonished at your lack of sensitivity and good judgement in printing a letter that absolutely reeks of the author's contempt for women - especially Trinity women. It is one thing to defend fraternities, single-sexed institutions, or even elitism; it is quite another to make derogatory statements about half the Trinity population! According to Mr. Green, Trinity women are "satin crasheenettes" and "Vernon Street groupies...known for their...genuinely both in proportion and inclination." Think about it - if the letter had been blatantly racist instead of blatantly sexist, would you have even considered printing it?

In the future I suggest you better screen letters submitted to the editor so that letters such as Mr. Green's - letters that are demeaning and insulting to members of the Trinity community - are not printed.

Sincerely,
Anne Zinkin '83
P. S. I hope someone informs Mr. Green that to be sexist is not merely to notice differences in skin color. One is sexist or racist when one is prejudiced against differences, just as to be racist is not merely to notice anatomical differences, or even elitism; it is quite one thing to defend social clubs legitimatizes ethnic and religious discrimination at Trinity and promotes division by social class as well as sexism. They stand in complete opposition to the liberating intents of higher education.

About Stephen Green's letter.

Dear President English:

I am in full support of the Committee on Faculty-Society's recommendation to phase the fraternity system out. It is not the case that social clubs legitimizes ethnic and religious discrimination at Trinity and promotes division by social class as well as sexism. They stand in complete opposition to the liberating intents of higher education.

Grad Proposes $$$ Cutoff...

This is a copy of a letter sent to President English.

Dear President English:

I find it distasteful to write an unpleasant letter to a Trinity College President whom I have never met. About Stephen Green's letter. Admittedly, his views are quite scathing and his manner is, occasionally, nothing less than forthright. I do not agree with what he says. I cannot defend him.

Similarly, I have printed letters from individuals whose views I take heart in as well as from those whose views I cannot accept. But they are all printed; nearly every letter the Tripod receives is printed. Simply enough, anyone can write anything they want to have printed in the paper. It should be no more than two, double-spaced, typed pages, it cannot be libelous and it cannot be in poor taste, poor taste being excessively crude or vulgar language.

In its weekly editorials, the editorial board expresses its views on topics directly related to the issues of the day. That is the privilege of freedom of the press. However, when other individuals are not then it is not merely to notice differences in skin color. One is sexist or racist when one is prejudiced against differences, just as to be racist is not merely to notice anatomical differences, or even elitism; it is quite one thing to defend social clubs legitimatizes ethnic and religious discrimination at Trinity and promotes division by social class as well as sexism. They stand in complete opposition to the liberating intents of higher education.

Sincerely yours,
Floyd Haggins

Women's Fashion (?)

by K. S. Kaulin

There are some important issues facing Trinity College these days. The women's rights issue, the fraternity issue, and the nuclear holocaust issue are just a few. Certainly, there are no lack of issues to write editorials about. I'd like to talk about women's clothing.

I wish to preface this editorial by admitting that I know less than nothing about the latest in women's fashions. However, do know quite a bit about the humorous and bizarre, and I think that this will come in quite handy in a discussion of this particular issue. Many of the clothes that are painfully, unreasonably painful to the eye that I truly believe can no longer defined as clothing. K-Tel "Body Ornaments might be a better word. It is this kind of vast practical joke? Has Bill Savitt contributed to produce a Plastimine line of fashion for Trini women? It's impossible to say for sure.

No one has set foot on this campus during the last six months can deny that the technical producers of Star Wars have nothing on the creator of sub-zero parachute miniskirts. I just don't understand it. It's bad enough that the creators of E.T. bubblegum has made a million, but does the inventor of phosphoresce, in a world where the rich and those who have a million, but does the inventor of phosphoresce, in a world where the rich and influential are actually human legs under those things.

Truly gets me, though, is the latest thing in winter footwear. Add this to your bewildered world view: an intelligent, college educated woman trudges through the six inch deep field of slush and mud that we fondly describe as the quad in two-tone plastic ballet slippers. "It's no big deal," the quip intellectual conversational chortle, "sure glad my girlfriend isn't wearing them. The thought of her falling and wearing her hair so short that it looks like she's necking in the strands really upset me. Then they trudged out. This isn't New Wave, it's the Women's Marine Corps, for the future that Marines would've wore ear rings so heavy that they don't have to go up the line for the remake of "Dumbo".

Now I realize that this critique is probably unduly harsh and that I've undoubtedly made kind of sexist remark somewhere down the line that will have the Women's Center up in arms. I'm sorry if I have, but let's face it; we're at Trinity College in Harford, not the Hard Rock Cafe in London. Onomy (sin 'or jie em') n., the joint agency of agents, which, when taken together, increases the other's effectiveness.

meetings, I've taken personal stands on current issues—ask me and I'll be glad to defend my views. Importantly, however, I represent and should express YOUR views. I'm interested in doing a good job. I'm a hard worker waiting to get to work. I hope you allow me the opportunity.

Emily Dickinson is Brought to Life Again

Review
Theatre Performance
Goodwin Fri., Sat.

By A. Jane Dorfman

"The Belle of Amherst," was a fine tribute to the life and work of Emily Dickinson. This passionate nineteenth century poet was brought back to life as Tucker Ewing, of Trinity's class of 1977, who delivered an inspired performance.

Ms. Ewing's announcement was flawless, her voice well-projected, her command impressive. Throughout the play, she maintained a vitality akin to her often attributed to Miss Dickinson. Funky, sad, thoughtful, creative, Ms. Ewing's portrayal was true to character.

The play was written by William Luce, and was chosen to catch a bit of buzz back to New Haven.

Francis Xavier Drapeau, another known as Bud, was from Fairleigh University. His poetry sharply contrasted with Bar-"nita's; hers was melancholy, he introduced comedy. His "Breakfast at the Freuds" was a good example: "Sigmund Freud would only eat bananas in the bathroom." Door locked. Faucet running. Door locked again./Only then would he begin to feel it down."

MIT Edges Grapplers 26-20

by Jeffrey Handelman

The Trinity wrestling team lost a tough meet at M.I.T. last Wednesday. The meet was just as close as the final score, 26-20, indicated. Although the Bantams were outpointed, they managed to win half of their ten matches against the 8th ranked division III Engineers.

The Bants got off to a fast and furious start, with Pete Zimmerman (118), Tom Waxter (126), and Nick Veronis (134) all winning. Zimmerman won 13-8, coming close to pinning his opponent. He had been up 13-4 before he tried to widen the Bants' margin of victory in the match, while at the same time going for the pin. Although the strategy backfired, Zimmerman still won his first match of the year, and as Coach Mike Darr later complemented Zimmerman's performance. After Waxter's win, Veronis won an exciting come from behind match which culminated with a pin.

At this point in the meet, things temporarily went sour for the upstart Bants, as they faced the heart of the M.I.T. lineup. Co-captain Mike Howe (142) was pinned also, and Pete Galiardo (158) lost on points. The M.I.T. wrestler on a quick, fancy move. Freshman Mike Oxman (150) was pinned also, and Pete Galiardo (158) lost on points. The M.I.T. wrestler, Tom Waxter (126), and Nick Veronis (134) all winning. Zimmerman won 13-8, coming close to pinning his opponent. He had been up 13-4 before he tried to widen the Bants' margin of victory in the match, while at the same time going for the pin. Although the strategy backfired, Zimmerman still won his first match of the year, and as Coach Mike Darr later complemented Zimmerman's performance. After Waxter's win, Veronis won an exciting come from behind match which culminated with a pin.

But the seven-say-dir Bants came back right back. Freshman Joe Adams (177) and Will Thomas (190) each won on points. In the Thomas match, Darr felt that "the M.I.T. wrestler should have been disqualified for stalling; it was a poor job by the official." The match ended one penalty away from such a disqualification.

At this point, Trinity trailed 23-20, and needed a win by less than eight to tie and a win by eight or more to win the meet. Both Powell, however, who normally wrestles in the unlimited weight category, was unable to do so because of a knee injury suffered in practice. Al Norton, who normally weighs 175, put on two pounds to be able to wrestle for the Bants in this category. Norton lost 20-30, but put up a good fight considering. The M.I.T. wrestler weighed 105. Almost 30 pounds more than Trinity's Norton.

The Trinity youth and promise for the future was evident in this meet, perhaps more than any other to this point. All five Bantam winners were freshmen, who seem to be improving with every match. Darr summed things up this way: "Where we were strong, we won. We wrestled very well. Everybody's pulling for each other and the team attitude is still good." The Bantams' record is now 1-3 with six meets remaining.

Ducks Fall to Wesleyan

Every cloud has a silver lining. In the cloud of last week's loss, the women's squash team quickly discovered that they do not like defeat, as they outmatched Vassar 23-20, and needed a win by less than eight to tie and a win by eight or more to win the meet. Both Powell, however, who normally wrestles in the unlimited weight category, was unable to do so because of a knee injury suffered in practice. Last week was just a stepping stone for the most difficult week of the season. Tomorrow the Bants are up against Yale. The Bulldogs will be fighting fiercely having let Trin slip by the New Haven squad leaving them in the fourth position of the national ranking last year. This will be a tough contest, as will Friday's match when the Bants challenge last year's number one, Princeton.

According to Dunham, the team played 100% better then the U.N.H. game "against some tough competition. UCONN, a Division II club, has beaten the likes of Bowdoin and Colby, but could only muster a 2-0 lead going into the third against a still strong UCONN. Outshooting Trin 40-20, UCONN turned it on in the game's latter stages, scoring three goals, starting six minutes into the period. As the coach noted, "The score wasn't indicative of the game."

Despite back-to-back shutouts, the coaches feel that the Bants may have gotten their bad performances out of the way, which bodes well for the rest of the season. Looking towards the future, Dunham feels the shutouts should provide a motivation for winning.

Prior To Pasadena

The title of this Tuesday Afternoon might as well be "tides before traveling."

It was interesting to see the reaction of the Hartford media and public to the firing of Frank Kish as the Whalers' coach. It's puzzling how tolerant the sports writers and broadcasters were of the continuing futility of the Whalers on the ice. After the latest firing, however, the tone changed.

Scott Wahle, channel 30, and Kambrell Marshall, channel 3, both questioned the purpose and validity of the firing. The point that has been evident for more than a year is that responsibility for the Whalers' failure lies squarely in the lap of management. The transactions that saw such quality players as Mark Howe (first team all-star), Mike Rodgers, Pat Butette, Ray Allison, etc., go to other teams in the NHL were not Kish's responsibility.

The value of a top trade in the NHL is on prominent display in Lanover, Maryland where the Capitols are suddenly a cinch to make the playoffs after dwelling in the Whalers' neighborhood through their entire existence. The Caps also gave up quality players (Ryan Walter, first team all-star, and Rick Green) but in return they got four players from Montreal who have helped put the Caps in a comfortable position.

The Whalers have been buried in trades previously, but now is not the time to become scared. The Whalers need to return to the trade market in a big way. They really can't do much worse, and patience is running out.

Bantam winter sports teams have enjoyed a very successful January and things could get better in March. Both basketball teams and the hockey team have a chance at gaining playoff berths. The women's team is the defending New England champs and are playing very well, while the men are on a roll. The hockey team has only lost once in Division III, although their extensive upper division schedule has hurt their overall mark.

Oh no, they're calling my flight. I'll tell you about it next week!

The women's basketball team has been outplayed at entering the strategy that worked for the Bantams last year, which was to keep the Engineers from having shooting bonus points at 6:11 and forcing a turnover. The Engineers won by eleven points.

At 7:04, the Engineers were up by fifteen and were ahead 50-48. However, the Bantams were not about to let this game get away. The Bantams got together and at half time, the score was 34-29.

The Engineers added to the Bantams' victory. The squad was tough W.P.I. team. Last year, the Bantams were able to get the best of the Engineers.

"We need two good halves to win this contest, but instead lost 71-68," Friday night at Ferris, the squad knew they were up against a tough W.P.I. team. Last year, the Engineers won by eleven points.

In the first half, Trin looked psyched to win. The squad was shooting bonus points at 6:11 and kept the Engineers from having this advantage by not committing five team fouls. Throughout the twenty minute period, the Bantams had at least a ten point lead and at half time, the score was 34-29.

In the second half, W.P.I. wanted the win and went ahead at 18:11, 35-34. The score flipped until 9:05, when the visiting squad went ahead 30-24. At 7:04, the Engineers were up by four, 50-48, and stayed ahead through the rest of the contest. The Bantams were held scoreless until 15:15, when Sheila Andrus put the ball in the hoop to make the score 61-52.

The final score was 66-54.

The Bantams' varsity hockey team played what Dunham considers Trinity's best opponent as they sent Fairfield to a crushing 13-0 loss. Cathy Wallert and Mei-wa Chen lost the game.

The Trinity Bantams clashed with the Fairfield U. fencing team on Wednesday and emerged victorious in a hard-fought meet with a score of 14-13 for the men and 11-5 for the nearly invincible women's team. Fairfield traveled to Trinity slightly undermanned, but with the best team that they have fisted in several years, and they proved to be tough competitors.

The men's epee squad saved a phenomenal performance; winning six 'bouts and losing only three. Each member of the squad, Steve Dynan, Mark Glancey, and Scott Hallett, picked up two victories. A promising freshman fencer, George Banta, won one bout, as did Ed Sharp, to bring the tally up to four victories for the sabre squad.

The women's team proved once again that they are an extremely formidable opponent as they sent Fairfield to a crushing 13-0 loss. Cathy Wallert and Mei-wa Chen lost the game.

Men Hoopsters Overwhelm Visiting Jumbos

by Stephen K. Gellman

After crashing through two untried opponents last week, the men’s basketball team took on three longtime foes. The Bantams capped the week with an impressive 80-56 win over highly regarded Tufts to bring their record to 12-1.

Tuesday night arch rival Wesleyan was put away early. It was the fourth straight game the Bants had built a ten point lead in the first three minutes.

Co-captain Dave Wynter explains the Bants early success as a result of the fact that “everyone is so mentally prepared for the game that we get off to great starts.”

According to Coach Stan Ogrodnik the early lead “allows us to dictate the tempo and we can then play as we want to and take a few more chances on defense and let our guards roam a little bit.”

The 14-2 opening Trinity burst included four fast breaks and layup points by Jim Bates. The visiting Cardinals got within six twice during the first half but Trinity scored nine of the last eleven first half points to go up 35-21.

The Bantams game against Tufts was to be one of their biggest tests of the year. After all the Jumbos returned all their starters from last years ECAC New England championship team. And for the first half and the first ten minutes of the second half it was the tough battle it was supposed to be.

The game got off to a slow start as the Jumbos led 10-7 after nine minutes. During this period, the Bantams got into some early foul trouble. But the contributions of Bill Phoel and Kerry Sullivan proved to be more than make up for the problems.

During the last 10.00 minutes of the second half and the first part of the second half, Tri was able to maintain small leads that never went above seven points. Tufts continually fought back when it began to look as if the Bantams might be able to open up a bigger lead.

Trin finally broke it open with 5:40 left in the game when Bill Phoel, who scored a game high 19 points, made a strong move under the basket, hit the layup and was fouled. The three point play put the Bantams up by eleven, 59-48, a lead that never got lower. Jim Bates sealed it with four free throws following a foul and a technical on the Tufts coach.

The game showed that the Bants can go against the more physical teams, like Tufts, and highlight their passing attack which accounted for 21 assists, 9 by Bates and 7 by Dave Wynter.

Tonight the Bants play at WPI and then return home to play MIT.

Women Swimmers Raise Record 6-0

The women’s swim team notched their sixth consecutive victory last Wednesday evening by overwhelming Wesleyan 114-41 at Midtowns. The Chicks simply were too fast, too strong, and too numerous for the Cardinal women, who nevertheless were impressive with their Floridian stamina.

Tracy Hanley, Nancy Meade, Edie Harris, and Lisa Hoffman sped to a win in the opening 400 medley relay, and swimmers wearing blue and gold flashed first in the next eleven events.

Double wins were recorded by Barbaras Brennan in the 200 FS and 500 FS, Lulu Cass in the 100 breast and 200 butterfly, Ginny Flins in the 100 and 200 back, and Dea Frederick in the 50 FS and 100 butterfly. Other winners included Karen Hubbard in the 200 IM, Debbie Crozin in the 100 breast, and Laura Couch in the 200 breast. Cam, Brennan, Flins and Frederick teamed to win the final 400 FS relay in 3:51.48.

The women were very sharp, recording many personal best times. Three national qualifying swims were recorded. Frederick in the 50 FS (25.53), Cass in the 100 FS (56.26), and Crozin in the 100 breast (1:12.59). Trinity College recordings many personal bests.

The decisive game; the number two slot, won in three games, 15-10, 15-8, 15-8. Sandy Wagner, was the inter-collegiate squash champion for Yale a year ago.

The top five players for Trin on the whole played well, each doing about as expected. The only slip up was number three, J. D. Cogan’s loss to Hugh Labosker 15-12, 17-16, 15-7. Mike Georgi, in the number one spot, was the other among the Bants’ first five who lost. His opponent, Victor Wagner, was the inter-collegiate squash champion for Yale a year ago.

Bill Doyle, playing superbly in the number two slot, won in three games, 15-10, 15-8, 15-8. Sandy Monaghan, number five, also won in three, 15-7, 18-16, 15-4. Number four, Burbank won his match in a long five games.

It was at the bottom of the line up where the Bants suffered by losing three out of four matches. Only number eight, John Conaway, claimed victory and did so in a 3-0 cromp.

Yale was certainly the biggest match of the year for Trin and will go down on record as the most disappointing. The Bants still must face Princeton and Williams, both with very competitive squashes for the national rankings.

Friday, there was a round robin match against Wesleyan, Brandeis, and College. Trinity won 9-0. Enough said.
