HOW MEDIEVAL STUDIES SOCKED THEIR EXAMS

Many and diverse are the methods that have been and are employed by medievalists. I have heard of a "hit" mid-year and final exams. The following dialogue between two students of the University of Heidelberg quoted from the "Manuale Scholarium", a Freshman Bible of 1481, shows how the boys of the Middle Ages used to be behaved.

Cam. — "I have a letter from my parents, from which I learn that you have not been better. I shall get any more help from them. An [40x1058]tish torments me, and fear disturbs my soul."

Bar. — "Why so?"

Cam. — "Many things are in the way. I haven't done up my work, and what about my exam?"

Bar. — "What about it? I have told you."

Cam. — "I know his frame of mind: he's out to scorch me. But why should he look at me? Quite evidently there will be much more ingenuity in the examination. As for me, I should assume some courage; you know that the world is not what it used to be."

Cam. — "There's something in which I have no confidence. If I should be turned down, my master would think himself excused, because of my warning. I should be so terribly discouraged that I couldn't face the thing."

Bar. — "Every master has the right to examine you, no matter how good you are."

Cam. — "And that is the worst. It means that I shall have to face the thing."

Bar. — "Then my advice is clear. Ready yourself, I think you'll need to.""
TOMORROW was the opening day of the baseball season of the University of Maine, and there was great excitement in the air. The game was to be played against the University of New Hampshire, and the students were eagerly anticipating the outcome.

The University of Maine team was led by Captain Keating, who was known for his strong hitting and his ability to lead the team. The starting lineup included players such as Norman, who was a skilled baserunner, and Berg, who was a solid pitcher. The team was confident that they could win the game against their rivals.

The University of New Hampshire team was led by Captain Everett, who was known for his strong pitching and his ability to motivate his team. The starting lineup included players such as Sarners, who was a skilled hitter, and Peiker, who was a strong fielder.

The game started with a high-scoring inning for the University of Maine. Keating led off with a home run, and Norman followed with a double, driving in two runs. The University of New Hampshire struggled to keep up with the high-scoring offense of the University of Maine.

In the second inning, the University of New Hampshire was able to score a run on a single by Sampers, but the University of Maine maintained their lead with another run scored by Norman.

The University of New Hampshire was able to score a run in the third inning, but the University of Maine was able to hold them off with strong pitching from Berg.

In the fourth inning, the University of Maine scored three runs, including another home run by Norman, and the University of New Hampshire was unable to respond.

The game ended with a final score of 15-3 in favor of the University of Maine. The students were overjoyed with the victory, and the team was proud of their performance.

The following day, the University of Maine played against the University of New Hampshire again, this time losing 12-11. The game was a close one, with the University of New Hampshire scoring in the final inning to win.

Despite the loss, the University of Maine remained optimistic about their team. They knew that they had a talented group of players and that they had the potential to win future games.

The next game was against the University of Vermont, and the University of Maine knew that they would have to play their best if they wanted to win.

The game started with a strong performance by the University of Maine offense, scoring four runs in the first inning. The University of Vermont was able to score two runs, but the University of Maine maintained their lead with a strong second inning.

In the third inning, the University of Vermont scored three runs, but the University of Maine was able to hold them off with strong pitching.

The game continued to be a close one, with both teams scoring runs in each inning. In the final inning, the University of Maine scored two runs, and the University of Vermont was unable to respond.

The final score was 14-12 in favor of the University of Maine. The team was pleased with their performance and knew that they had the potential to win future games.
