COMMUNICATION

Former Editor Sharkey Writes
Tripod Encouraging Letter

To the Editor of the Tripod:

I can honestly say that I know all about Trinity in what I read in the Tripod. Your issue number three smacks of a "Lenten" pedestal. I am writing this in defense of my young man's heart good.

I think it is a good idea, editorially, that "no man may come into the position of assistant manager if the manager is one of his fraternity brothers" rings true. I realize that under the old rules you had to be left out of the running, but I feel that the loss would be out-weighted by the advantages of such a rule.

Unless your sheet is intentionally "puffing" the facts (and I think printers demand "copy"), I am led to believe that Trinity is showing signs of a revival (without aid of Aimee Semple, who, by the way, is sufficiently in evidence), as assisted by that Cellar woman and a piano-singing-journey.

With much joy I note that the classes are having Smokers, that there was a 9-7-2 score in football that the Interfraternity Council will not admit that the boys visited old college hill where Late Night Smokers are allowed and new cheers will be born, even if it costs $10 a piece.

I have had my say and will not retire to seek out for tomorrow's classes the most snobby and unsavory element. Have courage, good sir, and remember that every Editor has his Lord Bishop.

J. JACK SHARKEY, '34.

GUESS WHO?

It was once roughly estimated that there is some damn fool who didn't have any idea of the thrill that can be gained by estimat­ ing things—that of the total number of telephone calls received on Trinity's campus last year, 60% were from a man named Thomas and 20% from a lady named Alice. No doubt Trinity men and women of West Hartford, and­ lean sex, 8 from 10—92% whereas girls voted for the men they wished to have in office, irrespective of fraternity.

We are not living in the familiar "Fools' Paradise." We admit the sophomores are a few in the rotted but still sound political worlds but three ancient politicians, and a changed method,

THE NEW SERIOUSNESS

We have heard a great deal of talk lately about the great change in attitude taking place among the college students. A skeptical mood has been found prevalent in our midst. Fashion has turned, we have outlawed excess and social dishonorable ways and habits we have ever seen, but we insist that, other than that one instance, our elections have been excellent and our candidates chosen really have been the representatives of their class.

The past few weeks we have seen in one instance, that real class elections are not truly impartial voting for the best man representative of the entire group. The one instance to which we refer is the sophomore elections, a blatant example of the measures are trying to avoid, and will endeavor to obliterate in the future.

We can all see the improvement. A few years ago, voting was limited to those who had paid their class dues. As a result, a few men gained by a room in the after the last morning class, talked it over, and decided that so-and-so of such-and-such a house was all right till the next time. Last year the dues restriction was lifted and a larger group attended the meetings. But the hour of thinking about the situation is the time to lift, and take one's responsibility more seriously, and the brothers answering the call found.

Ever since bulletin boards were first tackled on the rugged walls of Garvan, they have been crowded. In those days they helped victims of two types of moral col­ legians. The first group consists of those who, after writing their names in most public places and having ruined the walls of their rooms, were willing to help those of the classroom chairs, approach the boards in the dead of night to add their names to a list (1923 style) or Glota (1933) to every list of names. The lads of the other type of student, the well-dressed and thoroughly the fiendish work of the first by pulling the names off the wall, the second by simply throwing them off to bed. We’ve never before heard (save in connection with the fact that the students of both groups are on the phone together) these names figures or the ghost-writer; we understand, will have a grand new board to play with.

We can, of course, understand such a report. We are beginning to feel that we are living in the world gets off its knees, the COAST GUARD WINS. A Coast Guardsman kicked off in the first quarter, but the ball was fumbled by the holder and recovered by the Brass, making a first down on the 20-yard line. After a series of runs and screen passes, the Brass kicked off again on the 20-yard line, and the ball was recovered by the Trinity backfield. After several running plays, the Brass kick was blocked by a Coast Guard tackler, giving Trinity the ball on the 40-yard line. From there, the Trinity offense went on a long run drive, making a touchdown on the 2-yard line. The Coast Guard try for a block was unsuccessful, and the Brass kicked off to Trinity's 45-yard line. From there, the Trinity backfield started a long run drive, making several first downs. Finally, the Brass made a late kick, but it was returned by the Trinity backfield, setting up a game-winning touchdown. The final score was 20-14 for Trinity.

DR. OGLIBY PREACHES IN WEST HARTFORD

Takes Service at St. James in the Absence of Rector

At St. James' Church, West Hartford, the ninetieth anniversary of the founding of the parish was celebrated on Sunday morning, October 15. In the absence of the rector, the Reverend George G. Guimsox, who was unable to be present because of illness, the special service was conducted by Dr. Ogilby. There was an historic significance in his presence on this occasion, for St. James' Church and the College are bound by many ties, chief of them being the fact that President Abner Jackson, one of Dr. Ogilby's predecessors, was in charge of this parish in its early days.

Dr. Ogilby took as his text an obscure verse from the Bible, Nehemiah 3:3, which records the fact that a certain section of the wall of Jerusalem was built by a goldsmith and an apothecary. He called attention to what must have been a tremendous urge to raise a jeweler's son and a druggist's clerk to get their soft hands all blistered and bleeding in the handling of heavy stones to build a city wall and the House of the Lord.

He continued: "Those are days of the magnification of anniversaries. We are content to bask in the reflected glory of our ancestors by honoring sesqui-centennials and ter-centennials of their mighty deeds. What of ourselves? Will future generations any of us that we were satisfied to accept the carefully rehearsed re-production by trained puppets on the silver screen of artificial emotions as a substitute for the gallant achievements that we ourselves might be winning? Can we not be routed to build for the future, so that our children's children will have a few anniversaries of our days to look up? The study of history is a challenge, not a contemplative pastime. Even though our lives are soddenary, our muscles flabby and our hands too soft for real toil, we should feel the urge to social endeavor, which should make it possible for all to share in the thrill of building the walls of a city that hath foundations. The century of progress is over; the coming century must be one of repair and consolidation."

did a great deal of writing while he was in Vermont, and in connection with this work, he often said that she was his severest critic.

After President McConaughy had concluded his talk, Dr. Ogilby addressed the group briefly. The meeting then adjourned to the cafeteria, where sandwiches and coffee were served.

given, the society engaged in extraneous debating on the subjects of peace and religion which were brought up in the addresses of Flynn and Bauer. On the question of peace, the members gave their ideas on such points as The League of Nations, boycotts, nationalism, and disarmament.

As to religion, many members agreed that education could take the place of it on the grounds that a man with a college education does not need to have morals preached to him. Different ideas, however, led to a heated debate with no decision in view and it was decided to debate with more preparation on the subject at a later meeting.
