A NEGLECTED STUDY

During the past few years there has been here at Trinity, a gradual awakening to the fact that geology should be a major subject, that we should have more instructors in the department, and that there should be a more thorough investigation of the particular field. Considering our geographical location, we have always thought it rather peculiar that there is not more emphasis put upon the true value of the school, and the fact that there is a wealth of material to be studied on our campus. We have found that there is a wealth of material to be studied on our campus.

Trinity is a broad liberal arts college. That geology is a popular subject and commands no small amount of interest is evidenced by the fact that the department has more than doubled its enrollment in the past two years. The number of members in the department has increased from twenty-six last year to twenty-eight this year. This is a striking increase in the number of students taking courses in geology.

To many people a museum is only a place where one can see some interesting exhibits. But the Administration seems to enter only half-heartedly into any scheme for the development of the museum. The museum is no enervated guardian of the past, but a living, breathing organism that is capable of growth and development.

To the many students who are interested in the museum, I would like to say: "Get involved!" Help us to make the museum a place where you can learn about the world we live in. We need your support to continue as Mr. Forbes' assistant, and to make the museum a more interesting place for everyone to visit.
The Trinity soccer team, champions of Connecticut by virtue of its victories over Connecticut State and Wesleyan, suffered its second defeat of the season when an invading Massachusetts State eleven flung out a 2-0 onslaught last Saturday.

Scoring in the first and third periods, the Bay Staters, who according to the pre-season billing were the finest team he has seen this year, had too many weapons for the Blues and could not be stopped, with especially a passing attack at that all times knew where it was going. On the other hand, Trinity was not quite up to its usual form and could not get the range of the Massachusetts State goal until the final quarter when Underdonk and Schmidt launched an unproductive assault.

For the first few minutes neither team showed much, contentment themselves with a kicking duel most of the time. Each team was soon to find the balance of the game while tugging another in eight victory and a tie. The Northfield Mont Catamounts, who had not won column by flattening expensive, 13-6. Last Trinity strength for the Norwich encounter, fracas, probably will not see much a broken finger in the Wesleyan action. The injury makes it difficult to maintain Mickey Kobrosky, who received the ball upfield where the ball was kicked across the Chancel.

At the time that our squash racquets courts were finished, the law of Harvard Athletic Association, the very generously arranged to send down Harry Bowles, coach of squash racquets at Hartford, to instruct on elements in the students of the game. This year Mr. Bowles is coming down again for two days at the beginning of the season, Monday, November 30, and Tuesday, December 1. He will give instruction to classes of freshmen and other novices, and will also spend some of the time in instructing the members of the Trinity Squash Racquets Team. He is the only man in the country in his knowledge of squash racquets, Trinity College is fortunate in getting this visit from him.

Invitations are being sent out to the friends of Trinity College in Hartford to allow them an opportunity to see the new Chemistry Laboratory recently completed. After the guests have looked over the building they will assemble in the lecture room where Professor Ernest Butherford's experiments in the transformation of elements will be shown, after which tea will be served in the Lounge.

While on location at Merco, many members comparable in respect to his experiences, he really did have menings over the division of the land. When night fell and the men dragged their cots out into the open, it was with no little apprehension for their safety from wild animals that he climbed into bed. In the middle of the night he suddenly found himself wide awake and paralyzed with the premonition that some drooling beast was creeping in wait. His bed happened to be in the way.

Mr. Austin has some very definite ideas concerning modern art, music, sculpture, etc. He believes that the public should be given the opportunity to know contemporary works, and that they can get to know them only through familiarity with the various forms of contemporary artistic expression. He feels that there is so little contemporary art expression in Hartford, especially in the field of music, that he became instrumental in founding the Friends and Enemies of Modern Music, that started out as an informal group, but which has since been incorporated and has produced the Gertrude Stein-Virgil Thompson opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," and also the Hartford Festival last year in collaboration with Wadsworth Atheneum. This organization numbers among its members Professors and Mrs. Perkins, Mr. Austin was also instrumental in laying out the general scheme for the Avery Memorial building which, at the time of its construction, was the closest approach to contemporary conceptions of modern museum building in America.
